Thursday Afternoon, November 18, 1862.

BURNSIDE. We protest, in advance, against all fulsom praises, all personal laudations of Gen. Ambrose E. Burnside. He is a soldier, and therefore does not ask for honors until he has fairly rendered himself worthy of their glory. He is a man, and must therefore be trusted until he is fairly tried. He is loyal, truthful, ardent and called. He is sufficient of the soldier fearlessly devoted, and therefore we must confide in his valor until time and opportunity have afforded him the tests to establish his claim to our confidence and his title to our applause. Fulsome laudation has ruined some of the best mer that I ave been thrown upon the surface of the crisis. It has destroyed more men, good soldiers, than have fallen by the fire of the foe-it has not only bankrupted the leaders, but it has flattered the followers of our flag, until in the post. prestige of the cause we represent, and not in the use of the arms we possess, we had vainly imagined we were destined to achieve success. While our leaders have been brave, intelligent and ardent, they have in many instances been flattered into fools. Men who never stood in the proper neturns of victory. After months of flash of battle, have been bedizzened with more procrastination and delay, after the most ribbons than ever decked the bosoms of some of shameful waste of the material of war, Buell Napoleon's best Marchals. Our armies, though was absolutely discovered to have been playwell equipped, and superior in numbers, were ing into the hands of the rebels. He seemed estermed as invincible before their nerves were to be determined to weary not only the tested by the shock of battle. We were con stantly plauning, not our own perfection, but dishearten and discourage the loyalty and pasome grand scheme by which we might expose the imperfection of our toes, with their humiliation in an anaconda like capture and outcrushing contraction of grand circles. While this was going on, the fame of men began to eclipse the cause of the country. While our armies were being flattered into vain glorious feelings of superiority, hordes of ragged rebels were battering their flanks and assailing their centers until division after division found itself within the fortifications around the dome of the capitol, from which they had so shortly before marched to conquer rebellion. This is glory. With his headquarters at Nashville, all played out. The country will no longer be deceived by such strategy. The army must fight. Our cause needs fight to render it successful. And this fighting must be done with the sabre, with the bayonet in the field, by assault and by pursuit. Depreciation of our enemies will not answer as corroboration of the feasibility of our military plans. Gen. Burnside understands this, and theref re has not started out with the promise that there shall be

GEN. CAMERON'S SUggestion in regard to the defences of New York harbor is creating the liveliest feeling in that locality. Great activity is being displayed by the authorities of the city to place the harbor in a complete state of defence. The feeling in Europe, as it was probed and tested by Gen. Cameron, plainly indicates that we have nothing to expect from that quarter, however diplomats may continue to assure us of the neutrality of Europe. tique to assure us of the neutrality of European governments. This neutrality only means postponement until opportunity is afforded for intervention, and while there is probably no imminent danger to apprehend, it should be remembered that these are the days of sud. den surprises and dashing feats, and a necessity in Illinois, then have the councils of the nation

A POPULAR CHANGE.

We have waited patiently to hear some obterms as the commander of the Middle District, without incurring the displeasure of Gen. Wool. Gen. Schenck has seen much service, and is even now unfitted to assume the immesickness received and contracted while in active service. For the present, therefore; the Middle District is temporarily in charge of another, but we hope that Gen. Schenck soon will be, if he is not already, fully recovered to assume the important duties of his position.

Added to his other qualifications, General Schenck is a man peculiarly fitted for a position such as the one to which he has just been to do his duty, while his gentlemanly characteristics will never lead him to transcend his power so as to assume the authority and bearing of a tyrant. His administrative qualities are of the highest order: his zeal and integrity undoubted, and his loyalty partakes of that enthuliasm and firmness which it will be hard for the secesh aristocracy of Baltimore to cortupt or flatter. He is, in fact, the man for the

THE WAR IN THE WEST. Since the removal of Buell from command, we notice that the operation of our forces in the southwest, are beginning to bring their tience of the Union men among whom he had been sent for purposes of support and encouragement. Now, however, the accounts from that region indicate a great change. General the faith of the Union men of Tennessee. while Buell was vascillating and coqueting with time must be very doubtful: treason, now finds vent in the success with which Rosecrans is gilding our banners with and with communication by railroad open between that city and Louisville, we shall soon hear of the delivery of an effective blow by Rosecrans. Treason in Tennessee and Kentucky must soon stand up and fight a fair battle. It must do this, or succumb to the vigorous opposition and operations of the federal forces.
