THE DIFFERENCE.

In the South, or where the rebels have the power, there is no difference of opinion tolerated in reference to the interests of the Confederacy.

Wherever the dominion of Jeff Davis extends, there a forced respect of his authority is enjoined, and thus the people, with tongues and lands and lives are devoted to its success.

The men who have been obliged to practice the strictest economy to support their families on a dollar, or a dollar and a half a day, now find that they are utterly unable to live and pay the enhanced prices for the necessities of life.

Impelled by the pressing necessities of the times, and in the exercise of reasonable foresight for their own protection, there is a general movement among mechanics and laborers, to organize their efforts to secure an increase of wages.

So far as we are informed, the employers have generally been disposed to concede the justness of the demand for increased wages, and have made the concessions with a good will.

The supply of labor in the various branches of mechanical and other industry throughout the north is not likely to be excessive for many years to come, and therefore wages must generally be higher than in times past.

The whole army will be in motion when this meets the eyes of the reader. General Hooker was advancing by daybreak this morning. He will be followed to day by the grand divisions of Sumner and Franklin.

LABORERS' WAGES.

Our reference to the wages of labor, a few days since, has stimulated some of our cotemporaries to write and print articles on the same subject. One of these has made the discovery that the question of the price of labor is now being seriously considered by the sons and daughters of toil.
