WHAT OF THE DEMOCRACY?

Never since the old, blue-light federal leaders sought to pilot British ships into Boston harbor with beacon lights displayed in appropriate localities along the beach—never since then has there been a party so utterly at a loss for the means to perpetrate wrong against the government, as that which is called the Democratic party.

The Democratic leaders of the north are doing their share of this work now, as they have always discharged the same duty, ever since the upholders of slavery entered into a conspiracy to destroy or degrade free labor.

And yet in the face of history, in the gloom of the present crisis, with the full effect of their bloody war visible on all that heretofore contributed to the happiness, the glory and the success of the American people, the most poisonous of the Democratic organs are urging their leaders to speak out. Speak out for what? Have they not already urged the south to all that is dastardly and ungrateful? Have they not already accomplished by their speech all that is illegal and unholy? But doubtless like all great criminals against mankind, the originators and abettors of rebellion, after deeming themselves successful in their crimes against society and the government, will next "speak out" against God.

FUTURE MILITARY NEEDS.

The lesson which the loyal people of the north are now learning, is, that a nation of freemen should know how to defend their liberties. The tuition is most expensive; but if the task and its moral be well committed, the advantages thereof will become apparent and permanent.

We are not among those who are advocates of the costly establishment of a standing army. Such an immense war power has not, heretofore, appeared necessary in times of peace, nor will it be so when the present rebellion shall have been decided.

Pennsylvania has a border, no matter whether the war is ended in a month hence, which must be defended as long as the motive for rebellion is suffered to grow by permitting slavery to be extended and increased. If this war is ended without a complete understanding that the influence of slavery are also ended, it will be useless to talk of a permanent peace, because the advocates of slavery, at the very first favorable opportunity, will take up arms against the government, and again attempt its overthrow and destruction.

Beyond these reasons for all the loyal states at once to organize a proper militia force, are others which must be obvious to every practical, observing man. Our relations with Europe are such that a rupture may at any moment occur.

DANIEL WEBSTER ON DISUNION.

The Patriot this morning makes a great display of a garbled extract from a speech of Daniel Webster on emancipation. When Webster opposed the emancipation of the slaves of the south, it was on the right which one state might claim of interfering with the institutions of another, and not as the right of the national government to enforce an act of emancipation, constitutionally passed, for its own preservation.

Were Webster living, he would support emancipation as one of the necessities of saving the Union which he so long loved and so ably defended. As an offset to the Patriot's attempt to mislead the public in reference to the sentiments of Webster, we quote an extract from one of his speeches, relating to an attempt to dissolve the Union:

The Illinois Journal says that there is much inquiry among its exchanges in reference to the proposed expedition against Vicksburg, and not a little curiosity as to the whereabouts of Gen. McClelland, who is expected to command it. Gen. McClelland is in Springfield, Ill., busily engaged in preparing to put the expedition in motion. In the meantime, we have reason to believe that troops intended for it are concentrating at various points from Cairo to Memphis. The country may rest assured that the Mississippi expedition is assuming definite proportions, and that it will soon be ready to move.

From Washington.
