Mr. Speaker, the mind staggers under the contemplation of such a proposition. Bear in mind that the words are "damages to persons, and real and personal property of the citizens of Pennsylvania." Mr. Speaker, I would desire to debate this property that was to be paid for. Last year, the Senator from Adams saked for the re-imbursement of a few thousand dollars which had been destroyed for his constituents by the rebel raid of 1862. Almost, if not entirely alone, I protested against the passage of the atone, 1 protested sganst the passage of the bill. I foresaw its evil consequences. I regarded it as the entering wedge, which, if allowed to be driven home, would rend asunder the best government that God has ever vouchsafed to man. This year the Senator asks for untold millions, and the fatal precedent of last year is pleading in thunder tones for his demanda, and when another raid comes upon us, it will be but a precursor of another raid upon our treasury; but it does not stop here, the bill of treasury; but it does not stop here, the bill of last year provides for the reimbursement of claims to the State, by the General Govern-ment, which would involve consequences ba-yond comprehension. The enemy lost in killed and wounded in the three charges they made from- one thousand to fifteen hundred men, whilst our loss in killed and wounded was very slight.

Gen. Butler having learned that the enemy was heavily reinforcee, and by the arrival of a courier, having ascertained that Gen. Kauntz' cavalry had succeeded in their mission in destroying the railroad bridge over the Appo-mattox river, and several miles of the Danville railroad, also, the dams, tocks and embank-ments of the canal leading into Richmond, decided to fall back from before Fort Darling and by Monday evening our army had safely arrived behind our new line of entrenchments in perfect order, with the exception of Gen. Heckman's brigade, which was lately disorganized and the General captured.

This brigade formed the extreme right wing, and here the enemy made their attack with great desperation; driving back the brigade nearly two miles with overwholming numbers, and capturing a large number of prisoners. Many were also killed and

Several of Longstreet's men were captured, who stated that his whole force was co-operation ting with Beauregard. -Rather an improbable

One great object of General Butler's advance against Fort Darling has certainly been ac-complished, that of attracting the attention of the rebel forces in this vicinity away from the operations of our cavalry under General Kautz, whilst they have been destroying the enemy's communications south of Richmond.

a the Schate of Pennsylvania, April 21, 1862, on the Bill to pay Claims for Dam-nges Sustained by the Rebel Raids of 1863 and 1863.

Mr. LOWRY: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Senator having this bill in charge should attempt to discharge the committee and force the bill upon the consideration of the Senate at an evening session. All other questions that have engaged the attention of this body this ession sink into insignificance when compared with this measure, and I trust that the Senate will sufficiently realize its importance, to pernit the committee having it in charge to consider it well and make their report to the.

npon us by treason, is presenting to the consideration of the world questions of such magnieration of the world questions of such magni-tade as history turnishes no parallel for. The magnitude of the struggle itself—the immense expenditive of blocd and treasure—the im-measurable consecuences for west or work of mankind, overshadew all other struggles that no exaggeration to say that we had better give poured out their lives to protect our State and the property of our citizens, the constituents of the Senator from Adams are clamoring for burnt fences, stolen horses, and oxen, and whisky, and are asking that those white way, and orphans be taxed to reimburge those claimants mules and their horses ?

It is said that they lost ten thousand gallone of whisky, we lost more than that amount of blocd. Which was the richer or which the greater loss? I think that all this blocd will have been shed in vain if the priociple fr-volved in this bill is carried out, for it will lead to inevitable and irretrievable ruin. A people in such hot haste to clamor for damages whilst mr. Speaker, I would desire to denite this in such not have to denite the denite of denite the denite of the denit were buried out of their sight, could not be easily satisfied in the amount of those damages. Some of the Sena or's constituents have ir-vited these rebel raids by joining in the charu, of "My Maryland," as the song floated to them over the borders. Their known sympathy with rebellion induced the invasion of 1862, and the action of our Legislature last year issured them of perfect safety and immunity from loss. This was followed by another yisit from their friends in 1863; and this bill would induce them to invite a third visit.

Mr. Speaker, I pronounce this measure if famone, and will resist its passage in any way and every way whilst God gives me strength to the channel to as to as a more missaken, for stituents. Never were men more missaken, for when the fearful sum of all the suffering that
