John G. Fremont's Letter of Acceptance. He opens his letter with the usual Copperhead preliminary of falsehood. He gays: "This is not an ordinary election; it is a contest for the right to have candidates, and not merely a usual election for the choice among them." Mr. Fremont's own position gives the lie to his declaration. "A contest for the right to have cardidates" could only be waged by arms. That a man is a candidate, proves that he is not contending for the right to be a candidate. John C. Fremont exercis enjoys "the right" in the very utterance of the words which pretend that he is fighting for that right. But this falsehood was the necessery key note of the strain for which he has newly pitched himself. He must rant with his new colleagues of "the question of constitutional liberty brought before the people;" of "military dictation;" of "violations of personal liberty and the liberty of the press," and of that "abandonment of the right of asylum" which gave a slave pirate to justice. And all the time that we read this tirading of conservatism and copperheadism, we are required to remember that it is the s peech of John C. Fremont, 'the Radical' Abolitionist the man whose total fame and reputation resolve themselves into an act of military dictation, "resting its vindication upon the arbitrary and super-constitutional powers of war ! And where is the Radicalism that this man represented? -- that clamored for the violence which he now denounces?-that hated the Conservatism which he has espoused?—that execrated Abraham Lincoln for leaving so much of life to a thing which he now complacently ignores as being "destroyed?" that burned for a "confiscation" which he has discovered to be not "sound policy?" Where is this radicalism? Abandoned and betrayed by its great leader, what is it to do? Will it turn to Ahraham Lincoln, the Radical, and stand up for him against the denunciations of John C. Fremont, the Conservative? The election in November must decide this question. In the meantime, as an original friend of John C. Fremont-as one of those who supported him while he was faithful and advocated his course while that was pure, we now have a right to denounce his faithlessness and execrate his impurity.

The Vote for President and Vice President,

As a portion of the important record and that for which we can only find room, we submit, in a condensed tabular form, the vote on the nomination for President and Vice President, in the National Union Convention. That for President is the largest ever cast for the nomination of any man for the same station, in any convention ever assembled in this country. It is the first time in the history of the Union that a candidate for the same high office was nominated on the first ballot, since the second election of Andrey Jackson. We submit the vote as follows:

THE BALTIMORE NOMINATION. Mr. Lincoln's Acceptance. ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR DENNISON The Platform-Its Indorsement by the President Address of the National Union

League. The President's Reply.

Washington, Thursday, June 9-P. M. At 2.30 o'clock to-day, the committee appointed by the National Union Convention, at Baltimore, to inform President Lincoln of his nomination by that convention, reached the White House, when they were invited into the East Room, where the President was conversing with members of the delegation who had previously called upon him.

On its behalf I have also the honor of presenting you with a copy of the resolutions or platform adopted by that convention, as expressive of its sense and of the sense of the loyal people of the country which it represents, of the principles and policy that should characterize the administration of the Government in the present condition of the should characterize the administration of the Government in the present condition of the country. I need not say to you, sir, that the convention, in thus unanimously nominating you for re-election, but gave utterance to the almost universal voice of the loyal people of

To doubt of your triumphant election would be little short of abandoning the hope of a final suppression of the rebellion and the restoration of the Government of the insurgent. States. Neither the convention nor those represented by that body entertained any doubt as to the final result, under your administration, sustained by the loyal people, and by our noble army and gallant navy. Neither did the convention, nor do this com-Neither did the convention, nor do this committee, doubt the speedy suppression of this most wicked and unprovoked rebellion.

[A copy of the resolutions was here handed to the President.]

I would add, Mr. President, that it would be the pleasure of the committee to communicate to you within a few days, through one of its most accomplished members, Mr. Curtis, of New York, by letter, more at length the circumstances under which you have been placed in nomination for the Presidency.

The President said:
MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COM-MITTEE: I will neither constrain my gratification, nor restrain the expression of my graditude, that the Union people, through their convention, in the continued effort to save and advance the nation, have deemed me not unworthy to remain in my present position. I know no reason to doubt that I shall accept the nomination tendered, and yet, perhaps, I should not declare definitely before reading and considering what is called the platform.

I will say now, however, that I approve the dedlaration in favor of so amending the detartion in layor of so amending the Constitution as to prohibit slavery throughout the nation. When the people in revolt, with one hundred days' explicit notice that they could within those days resume their alternate without the overthrow of their institutions, and that they could not resume it afterward, elected to stand out, such an amendment of the Caratteria. amendment of the Constitution as is now pro-posed became a fitting and necessary con-clusion to the final success of the Union cause. Such alone can meet and cover all cavils. I now perceive its importance and embrace it. In the joint names of Inberty and Union let us labor to give it legal form and practical effect. At the conclusion of the President's speech all of the committee shook him cordially by the hand and offered their personal congratu-

The members of the National Union League adjourned yesterday from Baltimore to this city and called upon the President this afternoon, by whom they were cordially received in the east room of the White House. The Chairman of the deputation spoke to the President as follows:

Mr. President: I have the honor of introducing to you the representatives of the Union Leagues of the loyal States, to congratulate you upon your renomination, and to assure you that we will not fail at the polls to give you the support that your services in the past so highly deserve. We feel honored in doing this, for we are assured that we are aiding in re-electing to the proud position of President of the United States one so highly worthy of it, one among not the least of whose claims is that he was the emancipator of four millions of hondren.

of bondmen. GENTLI MEN: I can only say, in response to the remarks of your Chairman, that I am very grateful for the renewed confidence which has been accorded to me, both by the convention and by the National League. I am not insensible at all to the personal compliment there is in this, yet I do not allow myself to believe that any but a small portion of it is to be appropriated as a personal compliment. The convention and the nation, I amassured, are alike animated by a higher view of the interests of the country for the present and the great future, and that part I am entitled to appropriate as a compliment is only that that I am not unworthy to be intrusted with the place I have occupied for the last three years. I have not permitted myself, gentlemen, to conclude that I am the best man in the country; but I am reminded in this connection, of a story of an old Dutch farmer, who remarked to a companion once that 'it was not best to swap horses when crossing streams.' The prolonged laughter which followed this characteristic remark should have been heard. It was tumultuous.
