From the 20th Regiment. CAMP COCHISE, NEAR CHAMBERSBURG, Pa. Sept. 13, 1884.

Editor Telegraph. - After a stormy night, the wind subsided to the fury of a strong breeze, and almost rendering the canvas off our shelter tents - we have a lovely sunny morning, with just a tiffle too much of a breeze - fresh, but inviting - blowing hitherward from the majestic mountains northward of our camp.

As an accession to our camp, a sutler's tent was planted in our midst, yesterday; and, upon present appearance, he will do a thriving business - the secret of the success, at reasonable prices. Extortion will not be tolerated here - that's a settled fact. And to prove every assertion a single instance will suffice. Yesterday, morning while I was detailed as corporal of the first relief of guard a call was made for the 'sergeant of the guard,' but he had stepped away from the 'Guard House' to attend to 'some other matter.' As corporal of the 1st relief, not then engaged, I promptly responded to the call, when Col. Awt. pointing to a Dutchman with a horse and wagon, ordered your humble servant to take that man out of camp! The old chap insisted on an explanation, but I said 'six cum rouse,' (which means, in latiningo, I presume, 'no compromise,') forward? Get out of this, old man - it's the Colonel's orders. You're the same old gentleman who sold us three good onions for five cents, the first few days you dropped in to see us. A day or two after, you sold us two as small as hickory nuts for five cents, alleging, always, 'the onions had 'erized.' 'It's the time of one dollar per day. Ain't you the same old fellow that the boys threatened to ride upon a rail? 'Ingenious, going - (up he would have said), but I was in duty bound to make him go out - and so I interrupted him with 'No more paroling, my friend - go on!' - and off he marched, wishing us the terrible misfortune of all dying for want of his 'ingins.'

Private Smith, of Company B - a nippant as tall and stout as Goliath of Gath, was appointed color-sergeant. Our friend and fellow-townsmen, Joseph C. Westling, Esq., was honored with the position of color corporal of Company I (senior). Whether he will accept of the position or not, I am not able to say. Company C (Capt. Fenn) has the honor of being the color company, and it is the duty of his company to escort the flag back to quarters on every occasion after parade. I had much more to say, but 'time and tide wait for no man,' and I do not wish to bother our friendly and courteous Chaplain after the mail is closed.

P. S. - Last evening we were presented with 1,000 copies of a neat, serviceable and very acceptable hymn-book, especially got up for the use of the army, by Rev. Andrew Manhart, the noted Methodist divine, and an ardent philanthropist of Philadelphia. Thanks to Rev. Rakestraw, our fatherly chaplain. More anon. A. H. B., Corporal Company I.

Interesting from the Army of the Potomac. Gen. Meade Again at Headquarters. WASHINGTON, Sept. 13. A correspondent of the Chronicle writes as follows: BEFORE PETERSBURG, Sept. 10, 11 P. M. - Early Friday night the rebels in front of the 2d corps strengthened their picket line, making it a weak line of 1000 men under COVER of night they charged our skirmish line, and were handomely repulsed with considerable loss in killed and wounded. Twenty or thirty of our men were captured, but the design of the enemy was completely frustrated. We retained possession of the line they coveted or wished to occupy.

THE rebels were sufficient to alarm the entire line and throw cannon and mortars into confusion for some hours. After the subsidence of this terrific assault, every regiment was returned to the former condition of stillness. The rebels are said to be burrowing in the ground. A prisoner captured a few days ago, mentioned two points where they were engaged night and day in undermining our works, and that countermining was going on at another place.

General Meade arrived at his headquarters this evening, and is looking much better than when he left for home. Union Nominations in Chester County. West CHESTER, Sept. 13 - 1 P. M.
