SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 31, 1864.

OFFICIAL ADVERTISEMENTS.

The TELEGRAPH has been Selected by the Secretary of the United States as the medium for the publication of the Public Laws, Treaties, &c., promulgated by the United States authorities.

1864.

We close the business of the year 1864 today. In history the past year will be the most memorable of any twelve months since the Reformers broke the spell which had fallen on the religious world, and by their zeal, purity and achievements, shed a halo of real glory on the paths of the nations' progress. We need not go from home for proof of what we assert. In a year our own nation has made greater strides in glory and greatness than in all the other years of our existence. Six years ago we were looked upon by the governments of the world as a mere experiment, our authority as a nation being barely recognized, and our system of rule still viewed as the uncertain experiment of man's attempt at self-government. Two years ago every nation in Christendom waited for the near approach of our complete destruction. It was believed throughout the civilized world that the American Union was on the brink of ruin, that the claim of self-government was a failure, and that, as a nation, the American people must sooner or later be absorbed by the governments of the old world. The emissaries of the slave-holders' rebellion, in Europe, had so far succeeded in gaining the ear of royalty, as to render our cause exceedingly precarious in that direction. Aid and comfort from abroad were given to the rebel effort, until, as we have already as erted, one year ago the cause of the American Union was regarded as almost, if not as entirely hopeless. But twelve short months have worked a wondrous change. In that time our armies and navy have completely overwhelmed the traitors on the land and the wave. While these achievements were in progress, the people at the ballot-box were winning like victories. In the face of every possible falsehood which the malevolence of the political enemy could coin; in disregard of asserted tyranny, and with a full knowledge of the burdens which the war created, the people declared, at the election in November, that the war should go on while there was a traitor in the field to oppose the just authority of the Government. That declaration constituted a victory against treason which the traitors themselves have conceded to be fatal. It established the patriotism of the people, and with that on a firm basis the Government need fear no enemy.

The year 1864 closes encouragingly for the cause of the Government. Another such a twelve months of like events, and peace will be undoubtedly restored. We will enter on the year 1865 with the army and navy victorious—with the national credit immeasurably improved—with the rebellion reduced to the most desperate straits—with the loyal population of the free States ready to to obey any call for the support of the national authority—and with the certainty that the policy of the Government for the enforcement of its just authority, will not be changed for at least four years to come. These influences combine to render the nation better governed, freer and happier than it ever was in the past. It is for the people to decide whether these influences shall continue, by the support which they will hereafter give the Government. If those in authority are sustained, if the army and navy are upheld and recruited, we will not only be able to crush our intestine foes, but we can shake our victorious swords in the face of the world, and bid defiance to all our enemies. At the close of the year 1864, the American people find themselves in reality the strongest nation on the face of the earth.—Our resources are inexhaustible. We have a larger credit and more means to support it, than any of the civilized people of the world. Ours is actually the strongest Government in existence, because it has withstood the secret and open efforts of all the other governments to break it down. Our freedom is the purest that any people ever enjoyed. We recognize no inequalities but those created by crime.—The poor man of to-day may be the rich man of to-morrow. The paths of prosperity are open to all alike. This is our condition at the close of the year 1864. And for all that we possess and are, God alone deserves the credit.

The Position of Jeff Davis.

When the rebellion was precipitated, the leaders who had devised its plans and prepared the people of the South for its bloody purposes, were sanguine of success. Indeed so certain were these miscreants of triumphing, that they had actually arranged what States of "the old Union" should be apportioned to their control, where they would live and rule the Yankee as the petty tyrants of the old world govern the masses under their domination. Jeff Davis encouraged this aspiration in his tools. Davis had cajoled himself with the faith that he could set up a throne in the South, which would be occupied by himself and a long line of his descendants. With this purpose in view, the arch-traitor labored incessantly to connect his name with all the operations of the rebellion. He allowed no campaign to be arranged without seemingly controlling its details. He acquiesced in no expedition of a rebel gunboat, unless he was permitted to direct its course. The rebel Congress could not move in any enactment unless he was first consulted. Thus Mr. Jefferson Davis hoped so to idemnify his name with the progress of the rebellion, that at its anticipated success, its glory and its benefits would alone be reflected in himself and enjoyed by his family. He wished not only to be regarded as the fomentor of treason, but as the instrument which promoted alone, the success of rebellion. With these qualities established and recognized, and rebellion a success, Davis expected to wear a crown and hold a sceptre. We are satisfied he would have done so, had it not been for certain contingencies growing out of the operations of the Federal army and navy. But alas for Jeff, he cannot escape his responsibility. As he was anxious to control all movements of the rebellion in order that he might monopolize the benefits of its success, it is now becoming apparent that his followers are forcing on Jeff all the odium of Confederate failure. The Richmond papers are indulging in very rough abuse of "President Davis." They blame Jeff for Hood's disaster and Hardee's necessities.—They reproach him with having interfered with the well digested plans of the rebel army and navy officers, and thereby invoked defeat on the rebel cause. Indeed, just as Davis labored and hoped to centre in his person and cluster around his name, all the credit and glory of rebel success, so is he now feeling all the crushing weight, odium, disgrace and reproach of rebel failure. He is now undoubtedly the most unpopular man in the rebel States. Who will doubt that this is not one of the logical results of treason?

FROM GEN. THOMAS' ARMY.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

HEADQUARTERS 7TH DIV. CAVALRY CORPS,
MILITARY DIVISION MISSISSIPPI,
EDGEFIELD, TENN., Dec. 26, 1864.

Since the battle of Chattanooga, fought more than one year ago, my muse seems to have grown sleepy in her songs of the war, but the recent brilliant victories around Nashville, achieved by the hero of Chickamauga and his invincible army, roused the classic maid of Olympus from her state of lethargy, and I come to you once more from the scene of action.

Unlike my friend Cunningham, of the New York Herald, who is now here, now there, like some magician or genii of old Persian legend, I cannot sing peans of praise or recount, in glowing terms, the deeds of the whole army, military rules and military duties, confined my observation to one section of the battle field, and as purchased puffs have robbed a brave leader and his gallant command of the credit of many brave actions, I shall give "honor to whom honor is due."

On the morning of the 15th of December, at day dawn, a few stray shots, faint and echo-like, rang out on the morning air like signals along our right in the low land across the N. and N. W. Railroad. Like a small spark it was the kindling of a great fire, and by 10 o'clock, A. M., the roar of artillery and the rattle of musketry burst out along Smith's corps on the right, and soon swept over to the left, in sullen and irregular vollies.

Grandly beautiful appeared the infantry with their starry battle flags as they moved in two lines through the valley, supported by the cavalry corps under General Wilson, which consisted of the divisions of Knipe, Johnson and Hatch. At all points on the left the enemy yielded ground, were driven headlong through forest and field, and his whole flank rolled up on his right, so that by two o'clock Hatch was able to form on the right of the infantry and Knipe on the extreme right of the army.

At four o'clock, P. M., Knipe pushed forward to the Hillsboro' pike, advanced a short distance on this road and forming in line moved to the left, and at dark found himself in the rear of Cheatham's (rebel) corps. So close was the division on the enemy that his wagon train loaded with forage was captured, and many prisoners who came in from foraging and scouting, and supposed they were entering their own picket lines.

Capt. Simmons made a reconneissance with the escort, and discovered a wagon train, of a hundred wagons, on the Granny White pike. A regiment was sent out to capture it, but the commandant taking the wrong road the train escaped.

About 11 o'clock, P. M., a scout of Forrest's was taken by our videttes on the Hillsboro' pike, and brought in to headquarters. He was a shrewd, fox-like fellow, well educated, possessing a large stock of valuable information and the audacity of old Satan himself.—He cooly seated himself when brought before the General, asked for a drink of water with the ease and eloquence of a Chesterfield, and then hinted in unmistakable and elaborate terms for a chew of tobacco.

At 3 o'clock, A. M., of the 16th, Hatch having failed to connect with our left, the division fell back to the right of the Hillsboro' pike, leaving a squadron af the 19th Penna. cavalry to hold the gap. At 10 o'clock the enemy appeared in force in our front and on our right flank. A sharp fight soon took place, but the bold charges of our troops, led many times by General Knipe in person, drove them from every height, and by dark the division had taken Brentwood, driven the enemy six miles, and made several splendid cavalry charges, taking some hundred prisoners.

On the 17th the division in advance pushed on to Franklin, fighting with the enemy's rear guard and taking prisoners and flags on the way. The bridge over the river at Franklin being destroyed by a detachment of the enemy, part of which was captured, the cavalry forded, and, with Knipe again in advance, charged through the streets of F—— after the flying rebels. Hundreds of wounded Federal soldiers who had been captured after its evacuation a few weeks before, hobbling on crutches and limping on canes, crowded to the doors of the hospitals and cheered lustily as the Federal column charged through the place.

Some correspondent, whose thirst for money and literary fame is greater than his love of truth and veracity, has informed the world that Gen. Hatch, with nine men, captured three pieces of artillery near Franklin. This would sound well in fiction, or make an excellent yarn for marines, but Gen. Knipe's command took the artillery with its colors on the first charge, pushed ahead, and left Hatch's command to take it to the rear, where correspondents were found to trumpet deeds never performed and weave gaudy laurels for imaginary heroes.

Three miles beyond Franklin, on the Columbia pike, the enemy took up a strong position on the hills around Hollow-tree Gap, and in the front line placed troops wearing the Federal great-coat. A portion of the division having moved to the rear of one of the ridges by the flank, it was at first supposed the rebels had surrendered, and our line moved steadily up the ridge and through the gap till within a few yards of the enemy's line, when they opened on our line with a heavy fire of musketry and artillery. The vollies were terrific, but too high to do much damage. Capt. Reeder, of the staff, had his second horse shot under him, and a number of casualties occurred in the command, which fell back a short distance under a galling fire, reformed and with a stern determination stormed the ridge and drove the enemy in confusion.

At Rutherford's creek, 15 miles from Franklin, the cavalry corps halted to await the coming up of ammunition and subsistence, and the bridge over Big Harpeth river being completed, the 4th corps crossed, pushed rapidly forward in advance of the cavalry, and found the enemy's rear guard in position near Columbia.

On the morning of the 19th, while at Rutherford's creek, an order was received by Gen. Knipe to move his headquarters to Louisville or Nashville and remount the dismounted brigade of his division, and in a brief space of time the general and staff was moving through a storm of wind, hail and rain for N——. We tarried during the night of the 19th in the village of Franklin, and spent a pleasant evening at the residence of widow Carter, whose charming daughter, with the rich melody of her song mingled with the tuneful tones of her piano, drowned all thoughts of the next day's ride, and caused us to forget the hardships of the rapid campaign.

On the morrow we started early, and reaching Nashville by noon, established headquarters near the city in a splendid edifice, situated on a breezy eminence on the banks of the Cumberland.

On this campaign General Knipe's Division was first in the rear of Hood, captured 2,800 prisoners, two general officers, three pieces of artillery and four stand of colors. No division of the cavalry corps can boast of doing as much, and I think all will concede that none more richly deserve the second star than its commandant. WILL. A. C.

Gen. Grant's Army.

Heavy Cannonading and Picket Firing.

REPORTS OF A DESERTER.

Lee About to Astonish the World

Return of General Butler.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.

Information from City Point is to the effect that heavy cannonading was kept up during Wednesday and Thursday night, as well as severe picket skirmishing along our line in the immediate front of Petersburg. Several casualties are reported.

There was considerable firing in front of Richmond on Wednesday afternoon, and along the line of the rear picket guard.

Recent manœuvres in the rebel line indicate unusual commotion among them, but nothing is known respecting its cause. It is thought that Lee has been sending reinforcements both toward Lynchburg to oppose Sheridan's advance, and to Wilmington, to prevent the landing of our expedition against that city.

One hundred and fifty prisoners took the oath of allegiance at City Point, on Tuesday, and were sent North yesterday. Since then but few have been received within our lines, as the present condition of the enemy's forces is not favorable to their escaping.

A rebel deserter, who came in a few days ago, declares that the state of affairs in the rebel army indicates early offensive operations in some direction, the nature of which is, however, unknown; but the men are told that General Lee is about attempting the initiation of a project which will astonish the world.

General Butler returned to his headquarters on the James River on Wednesday. He left the land forces in the Wilmington expedition under the command of General Weitzel.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF.

An Expedition Under General Granger Against Mobile.

A LARGE FORCE LANDED AT PASCAGOULA

Mobile Defended by Militia Only

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 22, via Cairo, Dec. 30.

The news of the capture of Savannah caused general rejoicing among the Union people here, and a corresponding depression among the rebels. The markets were considerably excited.

An expedition under General Granger, in considerable force, landed at Pascagoula on the 15th, and pushed rapidly on towards Mobile. A brief skirmish occurred on the 15th, near Franklin Creek, and the rebels were quickly routed. Many of the people rejoiced at the sight of the Union forces. The navy rendered valuable assistance to the troops in landing.

Two tin-clad gunboats have just gone up the Pascagoula river thirty miles, and everything is progressing favorably.

Refugees report but 5,000 militia in Mobile, and that a strong Union sentiment prevails there.

A large reflection of a fire was observed near Mobile on the 19th, supposed to be caused by burning cotton.

THE EXCHANGE OF PRISONERS IN TEXAS—FIRE AT GALVESTON.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—The steamship George Washington, from New Orleans on December 24th, arrived this evening. The New Orleans papers are nearly barren of news.

A Galveston (Texas) paper contains the following: "Yesterday, December 12th, three hundred and forty-three exchanged Federal prisoners were sent out to the blockaders, and twelve females and children—among them Mrs. Jack Hamilton and Mrs. Judge Duval.—The prisoners delivered yesterday were exchanged for all our prisoners captured in Fort Gaines. The exchange will not be resumed until the Federals are willing to include Admiral Buchanan."

A disastrous fire occurred in Galveston on December 15th.

DAPARTMENT OF TENNESSEE.

The Railroad Open to Chattanooga.

General Thomas at Pulaski.

HOOD UNABLE TO CROSS THE TENNESSEE.

NASHVILLE, Dec. 30.

The first train through from Chattanooga arrived here this evening. The railroad communication will now be regularly kept up. General Thomas' headquarters were at Pulaski last night. Our advance was closely following Hood, who, it is believed, is trying to cross the Tennessee river. Granger and Steadman are on his right, and the gunboats are shelling his pontoons, which he has as yet been unable to cross upon.

The river is ten feet, and is falling slowly. There has been a steady rain all this evening.

Rebel News.

MOSEBY BELIEVED TO BE MORTALLY WOUNDED—PROPOSITION TO MAKE LEE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

The Richmond Dispatch of the 27th says:

"A gentleman who reached here yesterday, from Fredericksburg, learned there, from two of Colonel Moseby's men, that their chief was shot through the abdomen while scouting in Prince William county. They further stated that the surgeon did not consider the wound mortal, though they themselves thought differently. This, we are disposed to believe, is the correst rumor of the lamentable casualty. We heard last night that Colonel Moseby had been carried to Charlottsville."

The Richmond journals are debating the subject of appointing General Lee as commander-in-chief of all the rebel armies. The Enquirer of the 27th says:

"As long as General Grant moves and directs the operations of all the armies against Richmond, either by direct attack or by co-operating movements, it is proper and necessary that General Lee should be entrusted with power equal to that possessed by his antagonist. A commander-in-chief in the field, with power to move and direct all operations that tend directly or indirectly to the defence of Richmond, is now absolutely demanded by our situation. The experience and knowledge of the President would still be of great service to the country; but it is not mistaking the case to say that the country reposes more confidence in the experience of General Lee than in that of any other man.

"We believe that we but echo the voice and wish of the whole country when we call upon the Congress to create by law a generalissimo of all the armies, and that the President would feel it to be his duty to appoint General Lee to that position, and that such action by the legislative and executive would revive the confidence of the country."

Robbery of Quartermasters' Vouchers.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 29.

A package of quartermasters' vouchers, amounting to nearly $200,000, approved and issued by Captain J. C. Crane, quartermaster at Nashville, were taken from the train which was captured by the rebels on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad on the 22d inst. They are in favor of parties in Cincinnati, Buffalo, Chicago, Michigan City, Albany, Boston, Philadelphia and New York. The Adams Express Company notifies the public not to negotiate them.
