TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 16, 1860. ROMANTIC STORY. THE SISTER OF THE FRENCH EMPRESS.

From the Court Journal, Sept. 22. The death of the Duchess d'Albe has given a terrible shock to the family of the Empress; much united, and in spite of the high position to which the fairest scion of the house of Montijo has arrived, until now but seldom separated.

The nature of the illness with which the Duchess was afflicted rendered from the first all hope of recovery doubtful, and for the last month she was wavering between life and death.

The crisis, which took place during the stay of the Empress at East Bonnes, was decisive. From that crisis she never rallied, and remained prostrate and almost insensate, scarcely to be called in life, thereafter.

The Emperor, who had been apprised by telegraph, while at Versailles, of the inevitable approach of the fatal catastrophe, had wisely urged the departure of the Empress from France, lest she should be called to attend her sister's dying moments.

The sea, with all its inconvenience and trying, was far less to be dreaded than the moral effect of the sad event to which the Empress would have been compelled to witness her sister's death.

The Duke d'Albe was at Biarritz according to her intention. This, the most terrible trial in human life, has been avoided, at all events; and time, the sole, sure source of human grief, will have done much towards restoring the calm of her Majesty's mind before her return.

Few people have left more regret to their circle of friends among whom life has been spent than the Duchess d'Albe. The story of the rivalry in love with one for whom she was willing, when the truth became known, to sacrifice her own happiness, but who refused with equal generosity to accept the sacrifice, is never to be forgotten.

retired for slumber in nightcap and bedgown, lying now outside the coverlet, wrapped in a black domino, with the mask she had worn torn violently from her face and clutched, with convulsive pressure, in her hand. She called aloud, but no answer was returned. In another moment she perceived, even by the light of the moon, which streamed in at the chamber window, that the form was insensible while she lay before her, and that the mysterious working as if in the face of the death agony.

The house was aroused, and the family came in haste to the bedside to behold with horror the confirmation of the suspicion which had struck them from the very first. Assistance had only just come in time—the evidence which lay before them, in the shape of the empty vial and its warning label, indicated the nature of the antidote to be administered. Every help was given, and after awhile all effect of this moment's aberration had passed away, even to the moral regret of beholding the Duke the husband of another.

The generous impulse of the bridegroom contributed most of all, they say, to this desired consummation; for, till she was assured that the despair of unrequited love was entirely overcome would she consent to leave her friend and to accept the highest name and fortune in all Spain. Such is the story told in the chronicles of Madrid, and many people in Paris, who are intimate with all the parties concerned, have confirmed it oft and oft. The relaxed nerves of the countenance, the quivering eyelids of the heroine of the tale—herself a happy wife and mother now—are often quoted to bear witness of its truth; and we give it in testimony of the generous nature of the Duke, as well as of the strength of mind which enabled her to overcome the selfish indulgence in hopeless sorrow, which would have blighted both existences forever.

EUROPE IN 1871.—A clever little philosopher of the last century (says Novels and Queries), the Abbe Gallani, amused himself on the 27th of April, 1771, with writing to his friend Madame d'Epiny, from Naples, a sketch of "Europe as it would be in a hundred years." The conjecture of a wit can be a mark that might have been anticipated. As only ten years are now wanting to the period of fulfillment, it may be as well to know the fate which, according to the Abbe, awaits us:—"In 100 years I shall resemble the Chinese much more than we do at present. There will be two very distinct religions—the one that of the higher and better classes; the other that of the people, which will be divided between three or four sects, living on tolerably good terms with each other. Priests and monks will be more numerous than they were now—moderately rich, nothing more than an illustrious bishop, and not a sovereign. They will have paraded away all his temporal dominions, bit by bit. There will be large regular armies on foot, and but little fighting. The troops will perform admirably on parade, but neither officers nor soldiers will be fierce or brave—they will wear rich uniforms, and that is all. The chief sovereign of Europe will be the monarch of our Tartars—that is to say, the prince who will possess Poland, Russia, Prussia, and command the Baltic and the Black Seas, for the nations of the north will always remain cowardly than those of the south. The remaining principles will be under the political mastery of the predominant cabinet. England will separate herself from Europe, as Japan has done from China. She will unite herself with her America, of which she will possess the greater part, and control the commerce of the remainder. There will be despotism everywhere, but despotism without cruelty, without effusion of blood—despotism in a very founded always, and the restoration of liberty, laws, and the cunning and sleight of the courts and lawyers, a despotism of which the great aim will be to get the wealth of individuals.—Lumpy in those days the millionaires, who will be our mandarins. They will be everything, for the military will serve only for parade.—Manufactories will flourish everywhere, as they do now in India."

AN ALLEGED $100,000 FORGER IN CUSTODY.—A Shreve Business Operation.—Detective officer Smith, at a late hour on Friday night, took into custody a German named Henry Lowe, who stands accused of having perpetrated one of the most successful swindles lately heard of in business circles. The amount of money lost by his system of operations is over $100,000, and the modus operandi of his proceedings only goes to show how easy it is for even the shrewdest man to be deceived by a man to fall victim to the designs of the nameless smart rogues with which the community is infested.

Three years ago, Lowe, who is then supposed to have commenced his criminal career, hired an office in Beaver street, fitted it up in the best of style, procured as his clerk a gentleman in whom all reliance could be placed, and immediately cultivated the acquaintance of well known brokers. Among those whom he had selected for fleeing was L. Von Hoffman & Co., bankers, of No. 6 Hanover street, and to them, as well as others, he sold numerous genuine bills of exchange on the Colonial Bank of Demerara, W. I., and the genuine one of which continued for some time, and at last he had gained the entire confidence of all who had transacted business with him. When a solid foundation for the future had been laid, he began to sell bogus bills, and in a very short time had succeeded in raising $100,000. This was deposited in the St. Nicholas Bank, and allowed to remain there for three days, when the whole sum in gold was withdrawn by Lowe, who immediately absconded. His confidential clerk, who believed everything to be right, could not imagine what had become of the money, and when time for his disappearance was past, he was at a loss to know what had happened. It was not until the receipt of information that the last and heaviest bills on the Colonial Bank were forged, and that in consequence, those who had bought them were swindled.—N. Y. Express of Saturday.

CAPTURE OF THE STEAMSHIP CITY OF NORFOLK WITH OVER FORTY HUNDRED SLAVES ON BOARD.—By the arrival of the steamship D. Soto at New York, from Havana, we have intelligence of the capture of still another American slaver. On the morning of the first of October a Spanish man-of-war steamer discovered a vessel ashore near Sierra Morena, which proved to be the American screw-steamer City of Norfolk. She had landed on the night previous eight hundred negroes from the coast of Africa. After one cargo and crew had landed, full steam was put on, the valves were opened, her feed pipes were cut, and the City of Norfolk was headed seaward, and abandoned. It was the expectation of her captain that
