contained not only the best soldiers, but also the greatest wits and wags, originated all the fun and deviltry, giving life and tone to the camp. The corps, on the breaking up of the encampment, adopted that name, and have ever since been known as the Tigers, now termed, by way of distinction, the Old Tigers. The Tiger groan originated in this wise: At a dinner given to the corps during that visit, a trial took place between the two rival sections. the Lions and Tigers, to determine which could be rendered the most natural, the Lion's roar or the Tiger's growl. With the aid of that adas almost to lead one to believe that a veritable four-footed tiger was being stirred up. This last test established the supremacy of the Tigers; and ever since, at the sumptuous dinners of that dashing corps, whenever a toast is drank which is remarkably brilliant, patrioric, or from any cause peculiarly acceptable, it is followed by three cheers and a tiger-the addition of the tiger being expressive of extreme delight. In extraordinary cases, three tigers are given; this, however, is a rare and distinguished compliment. Here, sirs, you have the origin and history of the term "Tiger," which has now become so well known through-out the Union. And if you could hear this thrilling tiger rendered by the B. L. I.'s, accompanied by the Boston Brigade Band, at one of their thrilling set-downs, it would indeed make your blood dance briskly through your veins, and you would no longer be at a loss to

CURIOUS STORY OF A PIRATE. -The Governor of Bourbon was very circumspect in his con duct towards the pirates. It so happened that the Viceroy of Goa came to an anchor in the road St. Denis, and was invited to dinner by the governor; but he had no sooner landed than a piratical vessel of 50 guns moored along side his ship, and took possession of it. The cap-tain then came on shore, invited himself to dine with the governor, placed himself at the table between him and the viceroy, and informed the latter that he was a prisoner. When the wine and good cheer had put the pirate in good humor, M. Desforgues, the governor, asked how much he would accept as the viceroy's ransom. "I must have a thousand piastres," was the pirate's answer. "Come," said M. Desforgues, "that is too little for a brave man like you and a man of rank like him; ask more or set him at liberty." "Bah!" said the generous corsair, "why waste words on such a trifle?—he is free." The viceroy hastened from the society of a governor to escape tle select in the choice of his society. "The corsair, counting no doubt on the gratitude of the governor, at whose suggestion he had done such a generous action, and trusting that colopial charity would draw the mantle of oblivion over the past, ventured to settle in the island. He soon found that a p rate backed by a vessel of 50 guns was treated with a consideration quite different from that accorded to a pirate retired from the business, isolated, and alone. A member of the colonial council, possessing a retentive memory and an avaricious eye, denounces the ex-pirate, not so much from a desire to satisfy public justice as to obtain possession of his wealth. He was condemned to death, but like many other free handed "minions of the moon," he evidently had the sympathy of the public along with him. His denouncer soon met with an untimely end, which popular opinion regarded as a just retribution on account of his having assumed the odious office of public accuser .- From Rev. P. Beaton's and to be himself "foremost in danger." nouncing that on the 18th instant the Garibaldians met the royal troops, who broke up in confusion and were pursued; and that on the 2d the Neapolitan soldiers were repulsed from Caserta, surrounded, and two thousand of them

Caserta, near which this victory occurred, is a lively little town of Naples, of some twenty-five thousand inhabitants. It is the capital of the province called Terra di Lavora, and is situated on the line of the railway, some seveneen miles north-cast of the city of Naples and six miles south of Capua. At Caserta there are very extensive barracks, which were occupied by the troops of Francis II. The city also contains numerous churches, a magnificent royal palace, a remarkable aqueduct, twentyseven miles long, and interesting remains of classic times. Behind Caserta stands the old town-Caserta Vecchia-built on a mountain, bristling with fortifications, and boasting, like many of the out-of-the way places of Italy, a fine cathedral, rich in architectural and artistic eauty, and standing on the summit of the hill, like the jewel in the head of a toad. Ciserta was originally settled by the Lombards. At the present day it is noted principally as a royal residence and a military depot. Many of its inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of silk. Caserta is the outpost of the Neapolitan troops to the South. It is but forty miles from Guera, where the King was at last accounts, a fugitive from his home and throne, ready at any moment to flee to a foreign soil. This battle of Caserta, so disastrous to his hopes, will probably prove the signal for his hegira-Et exit Bombalino. It should be remembered, however, that the information about these Garibaldian victories comes by way of Genoa, is as yet only "stated," and needs confirmation, which we trust it will speedily receive.—Evening Post.

TAGLIONI IN HER OLD AGE—The Glory of a Dancing Divinity Departed.—What can be imagined more melancholy, says a recent number of the New York Express, than the sight now pre-sented of the rehearsals at the Grand Opera in Paris. Taglioni, once la Deese de la danse, has been obliged by Time, who, like pallida mors, knocks at every door, to abdicate her divinity; she no longer delights admiring crowds, nor by her enchanting grace extorts the plaudits of the echoing theater. And yet the souvenirs of her former glory are too strong to allow her to live elsewhere, and every morning she visits the stage to superintend the rehearsals of a ballet in which she is not to dance. The incomparable gyrations that so facinated the world can never more be renewed, but she groups the corps and arranges the tableaux, and directs the movements of the huddling ballet ers and lights, and the methylet amid flowto whirl herself into attitudes of such grace that none could resist their charms, she now appears in the morning in bonnet and shawl, with wearied and rheumatic limbs, her elastiered. No more can she twine her arms in subtle movements that tell the language of passion or of sentiment, more delicately than words; no longer can she inspire her pedestals with an expression as ineffably graceful as that of the old Greek statues; no longer can she elevate one nether extremity to a hight unparalleled in the annuls of physical history, and sustain it, pointing to the stars, as long as the plaudits of the house continued to excite her nervous once she reigned supreme. GUIZOT'S ACCOUNT OF THE LAST HOURS OF LAFAYETTE .- No life, says Guizot in his memoirs, had ever been more passionately political than his; no man ever placed his ideas and political sentiments more constantly above all other prepossessions of interest. But politics were utterly unconnected with his death. Ill for three weeks, he approached his last hour. His children and household surrounded his bed; he ceased to speak, and it was doubtful whether he could see. His son George observed that, with uncertain gestures, he sought in his hand a medallion which he always wore suspended round his neck. M. de Lafayette raised it to his lips; this was his last motion.-That medallion contained a miniature and a lock of hair of Madame de Lafayette, his wife, whose loss he had mourned for twenty-seven years. Thus, already separated from the entire world, along with the thought and image of the devoted companion of his life, he died. In arranging his funeral, it was a recognized fact that M. de Lafayette had always wished to be buried in the small cemetery adjoining the convent of Picpus, by the side of his wife, in the midst of the victims of the revolution, the greater part royalists and aristocrats whose ancestors had founded that establishment.— The desire of the veteran of 1739 was scrupulously respected and complied with. An immense crowd-soldiers, National Guards and populace—accompanied the funeral procession. along the streets and boulevards of Paris.

Arrived at the gates of the convent of Picpus, the crowd halted; the interior enclosure could only admit two or three hundred persons. The family, the nearest relatives and the principal authroities entered, passing through the conventin silence, and then across the garden, and finally entered the cemetery. There no political manifestation took place; no oration was pronounced; religion and the intimate reminiscenses of the soul alone were present; public politics assumed no place near the deathbed or the grave of the man whose life they

In the summer of 1883, or thereabouts, the Boston Light Infantry made a campaign to the neighboring city of Salem. The corps being divided into four sections, each section took to itself a name. The members of one section called themselves Lions; another section took the name of Tigers, and as this last section mirable auxilliary, the Boston Brigade Band, headed by the famous Bartlett, the Tiger

Six Months in Reunion. THE SHOWER BATH IN SING SING .- A Horrid Punishment.-The tortures of Sing Sing prison exceed by far the punishments inflicted in Neapolitan dungeons, if the details of the "showering" of one dasperado there, recently, was re-captured, and the keeper, actuated by revenge, punished him beyond reason. Kelly was placed naked in a bath, his feet, hands and head being firmly pinioned. The water was allowed to trickle down his face and worm body for a few minutes before the bath fell it well, not a shiver of the legs, not a muscular cry of distress, although he was actually being it well, Tom," said one of the keepers, after the first five minutes had elapsed, and time had been given him to recuperate. "It's awful," gulated man were audible, and, when he was exhausted, the cord was let up and the water stopped. A few minutes of release was granted, and down came the water again, and the scene was more terrible than the first execution. At lett at his office, corner Fourth and Market streets, or length, congestion of the brain was threatened. and a "hiss" from the physician brought the third scene to a close. He had been fifteen minutes under the shower, but had twenty-five minutes of the same to endure, and for the next forty days the same sort of punishment will be meted out to him, unless he dies under the hands of the keeper. It is described as an awful spectacle to witness this man under the bath. Every muscle contracted and became corded; sometimes the hands would become convulsed, and every nerve strained, when there would follow a relaxation. After Kelly had been showered, and taken to his cell, the keeper turned round, and with a malignant smile exclaimed, "We'll subdue him." Outsiders, from that single expressive sentence, may guess at
