

TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Mechanical Preparation of Soil.—The physical or mechanical condition of the soil—its relation to air and water—has not received that attention from agricultural chemists which its importance demands...

The soil performs various offices towards the growth of plants. It serves as a basis in which plants may fix their roots and sustain themselves in position. It also supplies inorganic food to vegetables during all periods of their growth...

This leads us to the foundation of all improvements of such soils, viz: draining. It is a remark frequently made by those who have no experience on the subject, that draining must be worse than useless in a climate where summer droughts are among the greatest evils...

Draining is only the first step toward improvement: the soil must be deeply loosened and pulverized either by subsoiling or trenching; either process will be beneficial, and circumstances will decide which is to be adopted.

The first process, then, towards securing a profitable depth of soil, is draining; next breaking into the sub-soil, taking into consideration whether, in view of the crops to be cultivated, it would be most immediately profitable...

Grass.—The following article, from the Baltimore Exchange, contains information of value to our agricultural readers:

For some time past there has been quite a sharp controversy carried on, not only in the agricultural journals of this city, but also between the dealers themselves, with regard to the relative merits of the different kinds of guano which are offered for sale in this market...

The commercial fertilizers, which are sold under the general name of guano, are capable of division into three classes, and are, indeed, known to the trade as "ammoniacal," "phosphatic" and "manipulated" guanos.

The "manipulated" guanos, are, as their name implies, fertilizers in which ammoniacal salts, and phosphate of lime in its most soluble form, have been blended, more or less skilfully, according to some special formula...
