more than two years before it was known that he was the famous barrister Erskine, and then it was only by accident that we knew he was not mad.

"How?" "On one Saturday afternoon he brought down with him a young gentleman of about twenty years of age, who walked about the pier while Mr. Erskine was making a speech out upon the rocks.

"What a pity that such a fine man, and such a pleasant-spoken man when he is calm, should be so mad!" Whereupon the young gentleman roared with laughter, and the young man, who was afterwards called by his friend's name, was afterwards called by his friend's name.

"What would be the meaning of the tradespeople's conduct was a question I put to myself, over and over again, on my way to the pier, for I now intended hiring a boat for a sail.

"The truth is, sir," he went on to say, "that all the people hereabout think you are a madman, and that I am your keeper."

"What?" "It is quite true, sir; and, as neither myself nor my wife could disobey your order, we could not tell the people who you were and what you were, and what you were doing.

"I do not know why—except that I wore a great beard and seldom left my rooms—but when I retired to S. pacher to write a book, people thought I was mad."
