HOME CORRESPONDENCE.

A lovely day was last Sabbath; such a one as seldom greets us during the reign of the winter king; and just such a one as makes us forget earth's cares and toils, and spend the day in anticipation of that better rest, that holier Sabbath reserved for the good alone.

And all below and all above, The different forms of nature wear One universal garb of love.

In response to the "sound of the church-going bells," we left our homes and wended our way to the sanctuary.

The season is now upon us—in comparative moderation as yet, but soon to be developed in all its severity—when, whatever code of morality we may profess, we can discover which it is that we really act on.

The good Lord, even in his madness and rage full of tender sympathy, did not content himself with the expression of his compassion for those "poor, naked creatures" whose "houseless heads and unfed sides" could bid the pelting of the pitiless storm.

Our Saviour himself, humanly considered, was qualified for the full performance of his efficacious act of atoning charity, only by being subjected to temptation and suffering.

Let us, then, when we feel the piercing cold of the wintry blast, remember that there are others, poorly clad, who feel it far more bitterly than ourselves.

When he hears the poor's moan, Of his morsel a morsel will give.
