

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

Four lines or less constitute half a square. Ten lines or more than four, constitute a square.

Waterfront Union

VOL. 3.

HARRISBURG, PA., FRIDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1860.

NO 95.

PUBLISHED EVERY MORNING, SUNDAYS EXCEPTED, BY O. C. BARRETT & CO.

Books, Stationery, &c.

SCHOOL BOOKS.—School Directors, Teachers, School Stationery, &c., will find a complete assortment at E. M. POLLOCK & SON'S BOOK STORE.

JUST RECEIVED AT SCHEFFER'S BOOKSTORE, ADAMANTINE SLATES OF VARIOUS SIZES AND PRICES.

BOOK AUCTION. BEN FRENCH Will supply the old friends and customers with the following books at auction prices:

NEW BOOKS! JUST RECEIVED "SMAL AND BAY" by "Wide, Wide World."

JUST RECEIVED, A LARGE AND SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF RICHLY GILT AND ORNAMENTAL WINDOW CURTAINS, PAPER BLINDS.

WALL PAPER! WALL PAPER!! Just received, our Spring Stock of WALL PAPER, BORDERS, FIRE SCREENS, &c.

LETTER, CAP, NOTE PAPERS, Pens, Holders, Pencils, Envelopes, Sealing Wax, of the best quality.

LAW BOOKS! LAW BOOKS!!—A general assortment of LAW BOOKS, all the State Reports and Standard Elementary Works.

Miscellaneous. AN ARRIVAL OF NEW GOODS APPROPRIATE TO THE SEASON!

WALKING CANES! Which we will sell as cheap as the cheapest!

B. J. HARRIS, WORKER IN TIN, SHEET IRON, AND METALLIC ROOFING.

FISH!! FISH!!! MACKEREL, (Nos. 1, 2 and 3.) SALMON, (six superior.) SHAD, (Mass and very fine.)

FAMILY BIBLES, from $5 to $10, strong and handsomely bound, printed on good paper.

CRANBERRIES!!!—A SPLENDID LOT just received by WM. DOCK, JR., & CO.

THE Fruit Growers' Handbook—by W. WEBER, wholesale and retail at SCHEFFER'S BOOKSTORE.

SPERM CANDLES.—A large supply just received by WM. DOCK, JR., & CO.

IF you are in want of a Dentist go to KELLER'S, 91, Market st.

Livery Stables.

CITY LIVERY STABLES, BLACKBERRY ALLEY, IN THE REAR OF HERR'S HOTEL.

BRANCH STABLE The undersigned has opened a branch of his "Livery and Exchange Stable" in the buildings lately occupied by A. W. BARR.

Miscellaneous. TAKE NOTICE! That we have recently added to our already full stock OF SEGARS

OF PERFUMERY HARI KARI, EL MONO, LA BANANA, TURKISH ESSENCE, ODOUR OF MUSK, LUBIN'S ESSENCE BOUQUET.

PHOENIX FOUNDRY, J. J. OSBER, W. F. OSBER, JOHN J. OSBER & BROTHER, (SUCCESSORS TO JAMES M. BAY.)

JUST RECEIVED, A FULL ASSORTMENT OF HUMPHREY'S HOMEOPATHIC SPECIFICS

WE OFFER TO OUR CUSTOMERS A New Lot of LADIES' PURSES, Of beautiful styles, substantially made.

ESTABLISHED IN 1810. FANCY DYING ESTABLISHMENT. J. W. JONES, No. 432 N. Front Street, above Calloway.

CHOICE SAUCES! WORCESTERSHIRE, LUCKNOW CHUTNEY, COCHINEAL, SOYER'S SULTANA, ATHENS BUTTER, LONDON OLIVE, SIR ROBERT PEEL, INDIA SOY, ROSEMARY SAUCE, ENGLISH PEPPER SAUCE, WM. DOCK, JR., & CO.

DYOTTVILLE GLASS WORKS, PHILADELPHIA, MANUFACTURERS.

INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC. P. W. WEBER, nephew and taught by the well remembered late W. Weber, of Harrisburg, is prepared to give lessons on the PIANO, VIOLIN, GUITAR, FULMINANT, GUITAR, WOODEN, AND ALL THE INSTRUMENTS OF THE ART.

COAL. JOHN TILL'S COAL YARD, SOUTH SECOND STREET, BELOW PRATT'S ROLLING MILL, HARRISBURG, PA.

COAL! COAL!! ONLY YARD IN TOWN THAT DELIVERS! PATENT WEIGH CARTS! NOW IS THE TIME

UP TOWN! PATENT WEIGH CARTS. For the convenience of my numerous up town customers, I have established, in connection with my old yard, a Branch Coal Yard, in North Second Street, in a line with the Pennsylvania canal.

Medical. HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S

THE PATRIOT & UNION. FRIDAY MORNING, DEC. 21, 1860. MOSES ORAN; OR, "THE BURGLARS' NEST." BY DR. CLARENCE BLANCHARD. CHAPTER I.

and a place for to "ride when their wind blows high." "He ain't going to peach," said Mr. Beg, authoritatively, "not he, I know him to be a bully man."

and maybe a few trifles; people ain't such fools as you take them, and going jogging more round the country—there would be plenty of questions asked about the carpet-bag, and likely enough the horse might take it into his head to come back—horses ain't fools either," observed the Tomtit, sarcastically.

Coal.

JOHN TILL'S COAL YARD, SOUTH SECOND STREET, BELOW PRATT'S ROLLING MILL, HARRISBURG, PA.

COAL! COAL!! ONLY YARD IN TOWN THAT DELIVERS! PATENT WEIGH CARTS! NOW IS THE TIME

UP TOWN! PATENT WEIGH CARTS. For the convenience of my numerous up town customers, I have established, in connection with my old yard, a Branch Coal Yard, in North Second Street, in a line with the Pennsylvania canal.

Medical. HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S HELMBOLD'S

THE PATRIOT & UNION. FRIDAY MORNING, DEC. 21, 1860. MOSES ORAN; OR, "THE BURGLARS' NEST." BY DR. CLARENCE BLANCHARD. CHAPTER I.

and a place for to "ride when their wind blows high." "He ain't going to peach," said Mr. Beg, authoritatively, "not he, I know him to be a bully man."

and maybe a few trifles; people ain't such fools as you take them, and going jogging more round the country—there would be plenty of questions asked about the carpet-bag, and likely enough the horse might take it into his head to come back—horses ain't fools either," observed the Tomtit, sarcastically.

Mr. Molecat scratched his head, as an unanswerable, and a short pause ensued.

"Well," remarked Dick Hutton, breaking the silence, "ther Tomtit's right, I s'pose; does look some hard after the bird to prevent the picking of 'im."

The Tomtit vouchsafed no reply to the speech, but lighting a fresh cigar, he rose, shook himself, and called Mr. Beg into an adjoining apartment.

"Where is the man?" said he. "In the back room, eating his supper," was that worthy's reply; "you can peep at him easy enough, for I left the door on the swing."

The Tomtit accordingly crept stealthily into the passage, and getting on his hands and knees, obtained a very excellent view of the man. Scarcely, however, had the Tomtit's restless eye peered within, than he gave a start of surprise, and retreated immediately.

"Here, Beg," he whispered, in an excited tone, as that individual followed him back again to the private room; "here's a confounded go. Who do you suppose that man is?"

Mr. Beg, of course, intimated that he didn't know, whereupon the Tomtit, looking around to satisfy himself they were alone, brought his hand in the form of a trumpet close to Mr. Beg's ear, and whispered:

"It's Duffy!" "What?" he whispered to the Detective? "The same," rejoined the Tomtit with an expression plainly denoting his agitation—"Who or what should bring him here alone, I neither know nor can guess—Beg, keep this from the boys, they are savage enough now, but if they should find out the truth, I couldn't control 'em. They would tear this man to pieces, but, Beg, that mustn't be; they must be led off; for it would be the worst thing yet to kill him; he would be missed as sure as breathing."

"Is this the one who has been trying so long to find our Nest?" inquired Beg. "The very same," replied Tomtit. "You know the State government has offered a reward of over five thousand dollars for the discovery of our whereabouts, and this Duffy has been sneaking around trying to find us, not so much for the possession of the reward as some private aim; he ain't a regular Detective, or he might be led off; years ago he was on our track. I have been watching him all along, designing to finish him when a good opportunity offered, but he wily scoundrel managed to escape me; he wily disguise himself as much as he likes, he can't cheat me?"

"He's disguised, then?" said Mr. Beg, amazed at first. "Of course he is; that fatness isn't real. He thinks he's unknown to me, but I'll pay him off yet," rejoined the Tomtit, with a silent imprecation. "I'll get rid of him, but it mustn't be done here. Now then, Beg, listen: Fetch me a lantern and the key of the— You understand me?"

Beg nodded his head, and flew off with alacrity. No one entertained a greater admiration of the Tomtit than that gentleman; he regarded with the same deference a dog would show to his master, and made no remark as long as he could testify his servile attention; he merely returned with the lantern and key, and to his great surprise found the burglar chief absorbed in the contemplation of the miniature of a young girl, seemingly some seventeen years of age, and of surpassing loveliness, and heard him mutter, "He certainly has good cause to hate me, but I would have spared him had he kept away from the Nest." Now, however, he has rushed upon his doom!" Then becoming aware of the presence, the Tomtit hastily thrust the picture in his bosom, and turning to the inkeeper, whispered:

"Let me out by the back door, Beg." "All right," was the quick response. "Not a word to the boys, mind; if they miss me, tell 'em I've gone to bed." The Tomtit, with this parting caution, made his exit from the door, which Mr. Beg held open, and walked rapidly off.

The Patriot & Union.

FRIDAY MORNING, DEC. 21, 1860. MOSES ORAN; OR, "THE BURGLARS' NEST." BY DR. CLARENCE BLANCHARD. CHAPTER I.

and a place for to "ride when their wind blows high." "He ain't going to peach," said Mr. Beg, authoritatively, "not he, I know him to be a bully man."

and maybe a few trifles; people ain't such fools as you take them, and going jogging more round the country—there would be plenty of questions asked about the carpet-bag, and likely enough the horse might take it into his head to come back—horses ain't fools either," observed the Tomtit, sarcastically.

Mr. Molecat scratched his head, as an unanswerable, and a short pause ensued.

"Well," remarked Dick Hutton, breaking the silence, "ther Tomtit's right, I s'pose; does look some hard after the bird to prevent the picking of 'im."

The Tomtit vouchsafed no reply to the speech, but lighting a fresh cigar, he rose, shook himself, and called Mr. Beg into an adjoining apartment.

"Where is the man?" said he. "In the back room, eating his supper," was that worthy's reply; "you can peep at him easy enough, for I left the door on the swing."

The Tomtit accordingly crept stealthily into the passage, and getting on his hands and knees, obtained a very excellent view of the man. Scarcely, however, had the Tomtit's restless eye peered within, than he gave a start of surprise, and retreated immediately.

"Here, Beg," he whispered, in an excited tone, as that individual followed him back again to the private room; "here's a confounded go. Who do you suppose that man is?"

Mr. Beg, of course, intimated that he didn't know, whereupon the Tomtit, looking around to satisfy himself they were alone, brought his hand in the form of a trumpet close to Mr. Beg's ear, and whispered:

"It's Duffy!" "What?" he whispered to the Detective? "The same," rejoined the Tomtit with an expression plainly denoting his agitation—"Who or what should bring him here alone, I neither know nor can guess—Beg, keep this from the boys, they are savage enough now, but if they should find out the truth, I couldn't control 'em. They would tear this man to pieces, but, Beg, that mustn't be; they must be led off; for it would be the worst thing yet to kill him; he would be missed as sure as breathing."

"Is this the one who has been trying so long to find our Nest?" inquired Beg. "The very same," replied Tomtit. "You know the State government has offered a reward of over five thousand dollars for the discovery of our whereabouts, and this Duffy has been sneaking around trying to find us, not so much for the possession of the reward as some private aim; he ain't a regular Detective, or he might be led off; years ago he was on our track. I have been watching him all along, designing to finish him when a good opportunity offered, but he wily scoundrel managed to escape me; he wily disguise himself as much as he likes, he can't cheat me?"

"He's disguised, then?" said Mr. Beg, amazed at first. "Of course he is; that fatness isn't real. He thinks he's unknown to me, but I'll pay him off yet," rejoined the Tomtit, with a silent imprecation. "I'll get rid of him, but it mustn't be done here. Now then, Beg, listen: Fetch me a lantern and the key of the— You understand me?"

Beg nodded his head, and flew off with alacrity. No one entertained a greater admiration of the Tomtit than that gentleman; he regarded with the same deference a dog would show to his master, and made no remark as long as he could testify his servile attention; he merely returned with the lantern and key, and to his great surprise found the burglar chief absorbed in the contemplation of the miniature of a young girl, seemingly some seventeen years of age, and of surpassing loveliness, and heard him mutter, "He certainly has good cause to hate me, but I would have spared him had he kept away from the Nest." Now, however, he has rushed upon his doom!" Then becoming aware of the presence, the Tomtit hastily thrust the picture in his bosom, and turning to the inkeeper, whispered:

"Let me out by the back door, Beg." "All right," was the quick response. "Not a word to the boys, mind; if they miss me, tell 'em I've gone to bed." The Tomtit, with this parting caution, made his exit from the door, which Mr. Beg held open, and walked rapidly off.

The faithful custodian of the Burglars' Nest stood for a few minutes listening, till the retreating footsteps of the burglar chief had died away in the distance; then he carefully closed and relocked the door, and returned to the bar, there to muse over the surprising and startling disclosures which had been made to him.

It was one of those remarkable circumstances that sometimes happen in real life, that Mr. Detective Duffy should have unconsciously blundered into the very place he had been searching for vainly the past two years. As he sat quietly eating his supper he little dreamed that a few yards off stood a figure which, the mere sight of, would have moved him to an absolute frenzy; and well it might,—for there was a story connected with that figure, a tale so heart-rending, so terrible, so revolting,—of faith broken, of hospitality abused, of wrongs perpetrated, of an idolized daughter consigned to wretchedness,—that it could not have been passed over. It had left its impress on the care-worn features of that old man, discernible in every lineament; his gray eyes seemed to flash with the same spirit,—of deep, abhorred revenge.

And now those two men were about to meet—the Detective known to the Burglar, the Burglar unknown to the Detective—to engage in a desperate game, the issue of which was to be death to one or both. Intelligence and honesty were to be pitted against cunning and crime. What was to be the result of this fearful struggle and threat of vengeance, we shall be able to see in our next chapter.

The above is all of this story that will be published in our columns. The continuation of it from where it leaves off here can be found only in the New York Ledger, the great family paper, which is for sale at all the stores throughout the city and country, where papers are sold. Remember and ask for the New York Ledger of January 5, and in it you will find the continuation of the story from where it leaves off here.

The Ledger is mailed to subscribers at $2 a year, or two copies for $3. The bills of all good, sound banks in any portion of the Union taken at par. Address your letters to Robert Donner, publisher, 40 Park Row, New York. It is the handsomest and best illustrated paper in the country, elegantly illustrated, and characterized by a high moral tone.

The Patriot & Union.

FRIDAY MORNING, DEC. 21, 1860. MOSES ORAN; OR, "THE BURGLARS' NEST." BY DR. CLARENCE BLANCHARD. CHAPTER I.

and a place for to "ride when their wind blows high." "He ain't going to peach," said Mr. Beg, authoritatively, "not he, I know him to be a bully man."

and maybe a few trifles; people ain't such fools as you take them, and going jogging more round the country—there would be plenty of questions asked about the carpet-bag, and likely enough the horse might take it into his head to come back—horses ain't fools either," observed the Tomtit, sarcastically.

Mr. Molecat scratched his head, as an unanswerable, and a short pause ensued.

"Well," remarked Dick Hutton, breaking the silence, "ther Tomtit's right, I s'pose; does look some hard after the bird to prevent the picking of 'im."

The Tomtit vouchsafed no reply to the speech, but lighting a fresh cigar, he rose, shook himself, and called Mr. Beg into an adjoining apartment.

"Where is the man?" said he. "In the back room, eating his supper," was that worthy's reply; "you can peep at him easy enough, for I left the door on the swing."

The Tomtit accordingly crept stealthily into the passage, and getting on his hands and knees, obtained a very excellent view of the man. Scarcely, however, had the Tomtit's restless eye peered within, than he gave a start of surprise, and retreated immediately.

"Here, Beg," he whispered, in an excited tone, as that individual followed him back again to the private room; "here's a confounded go. Who do you suppose that man is?"

Mr. Beg, of course, intimated that he didn't know, whereupon the Tomtit, looking around to satisfy himself they were alone, brought his hand in the form of a trumpet close to Mr. Beg's ear, and whispered:

"It's Duffy!" "What?" he whispered to the Detective? "The same," rejoined the Tomtit with an expression plainly denoting his agitation—"Who or what should bring him here alone, I neither know nor can guess—Beg, keep this from the boys, they are savage enough now, but if they should find out the truth, I couldn't control 'em. They would tear this man to pieces, but, Beg, that mustn't be; they must be led off; for it would be the worst thing yet to kill him; he would be missed as sure as breathing."

"Is this the one who has been trying so long to find our Nest?" inquired Beg. "The very same," replied Tomtit. "You know the State government has offered a reward of over five thousand dollars for the discovery of our whereabouts, and this Duffy has been sneaking around trying to find us, not so much for the possession of the reward as some private aim; he ain't a regular Detective, or he might be led off; years ago he was on our track. I have been watching him all along, designing to finish him when a good opportunity offered, but he wily scoundrel managed to escape me; he wily disguise himself as much as he likes, he can't cheat me?"

"He's disguised, then?" said Mr. Beg, amazed at first. "Of course he is; that fatness isn't real. He thinks he's unknown to me, but I'll pay him off yet," rejoined the Tomtit, with a silent imprecation. "I'll get rid of him, but it mustn't be done here. Now then, Beg, listen: Fetch me a lantern and the key of the— You understand me?"

Beg nodded his head, and flew off with alacrity. No one entertained a greater admiration of the Tomtit than that gentleman; he regarded with the same deference a dog would show to his master, and made no remark as long as he could testify his servile attention; he merely returned with the lantern and key, and to his great surprise found the burglar chief absorbed in the contemplation of the miniature of a young girl, seemingly some seventeen years of age, and of surpassing loveliness, and heard him mutter, "He certainly has good cause to hate me, but I would have spared him had he kept away from the Nest." Now, however, he has rushed upon his doom!" Then becoming aware of the presence, the Tomtit hastily thrust the picture in his bosom, and turning to the inkeeper, whispered:

"Let me out by the back door, Beg." "All right," was the quick response. "Not a word to the boys, mind; if they miss me, tell 'em I've gone to bed." The Tomtit, with this parting caution, made his exit from the door, which Mr. Beg held open, and walked rapidly off.

The faithful custodian of the Burglars' Nest stood for a few minutes listening, till the retreating footsteps of the burglar chief had died away in the distance; then he carefully closed and relocked the door, and returned to the bar, there to muse over the surprising and startling disclosures which had been made to him.

It was one of those remarkable circumstances that sometimes happen in real life, that Mr. Detective Duffy should have unconsciously blundered into the very place he had been searching for vainly the past two years. As he sat quietly eating his supper he little dreamed that a few yards off stood a figure which, the mere sight of, would have moved him to an absolute frenzy; and well it might,—for there was a story connected with that figure, a tale so heart-rending, so terrible, so revolving,—of faith broken, of hospitality abused, of wrongs perpetrated, of an idolized daughter consigned to wretchedness,—that it could not have been passed over. It had left its impress on the care-worn features of that old man, discernible in every lineament; his gray eyes seemed to flash with the same spirit,—of deep, abhorred revenge.

And now those two men were about to meet—the Detective known to the Burglar, the Burglar unknown to the Detective—to engage in a desperate game, the issue of which was to be death to one or both. Intelligence and honesty were to be pitted against cunning and crime. What was to be the result of this fearful struggle and threat of vengeance, we shall be able to see in our next chapter.

The above is all of this story that will be published in our columns. The continuation of it from where it leaves off here can be found only in the New York Ledger, the great family paper, which is for sale at all the stores throughout the city and country, where papers are sold. Remember and ask for the New York Ledger of January 5, and in it you will find the continuation of the story from where it leaves off here.

The Ledger is mailed to subscribers at $2 a year, or two copies for $3. The bills of all good, sound banks in any portion of the Union taken at par. Address your letters to Robert Donner, publisher, 40 Park Row, New York. It is the handsomest and best illustrated paper in the country, elegantly illustrated, and characterized by a high moral tone.

The Patriot & Union.

FRIDAY MORNING, DEC. 21, 1860. MOSES ORAN; OR, "THE BURGLARS' NEST." BY DR. CLARENCE BLANCHARD. CHAPTER I.

and a place for to "ride when their wind blows high." "He ain't going to peach," said Mr. Beg, authoritatively, "not he, I know him to be a bully man."

and maybe a few trifles; people ain't such fools as you take them, and going jogging more round the country—there would be plenty of questions asked about the carpet-bag, and likely enough the horse might take it into his head to come back—horses ain't fools either," observed the Tomtit, sarcastically.

Mr. Molecat scratched his head, as an unanswerable, and a short pause ensued.

"Well," remarked Dick Hutton, breaking the silence, "ther Tomtit's right, I s'pose; does look some hard after the bird to prevent the picking of 'im."

The Tomtit vouchsafed no reply to the speech, but lighting a fresh cigar, he rose, shook himself, and called Mr. Beg into an adjoining apartment.

"Where is the man?" said he. "In the back room, eating his supper," was that worthy's reply; "you can peep at him easy enough, for I left the door on the swing."

The Tomtit accordingly crept stealthily into the passage, and getting on his hands and knees, obtained a very excellent view of the man. Scarcely, however, had the Tomtit's restless eye peered within, than he gave a start of surprise, and retreated immediately.

"Here, Beg," he whispered, in an excited tone, as that individual followed him back again to the private room; "here's a confounded go. Who do you suppose that man is?"

Mr. Beg, of course, intimated that he didn't know, whereupon the Tomtit, looking around to satisfy himself they were alone, brought his hand in the form of a trumpet close to Mr. Beg's ear, and whispered:

"It's Duffy!" "What?" he whispered to the Detective? "The same," rejoined the Tomtit with an expression plainly denoting his agitation—"Who or what should bring him here alone, I neither know nor can guess—Beg, keep this from the boys, they are savage enough now, but if they should find out the truth, I couldn't control 'em. They would tear this man to pieces, but, Beg, that mustn't be; they must be led off; for it would be the worst thing yet to kill him; he would be missed as sure as breathing."

"Is this the one who has been trying so long to find our Nest?" inquired Beg. "The very same," replied Tomtit. "You know the State government has offered a reward of over five thousand dollars for the discovery of our whereabouts, and this Duffy has been sneaking around trying to find us, not so much for the possession of the reward as some private aim; he ain't a regular Detective, or he might be led off; years ago he was on our track. I have been watching him all along, designing to finish him when a good opportunity offered, but he wily scoundrel managed to escape me; he wily disguise himself as much as he likes, he can't cheat me?"

"He's disguised, then?" said Mr. Beg, amazed at first. "Of course he is; that fatness isn't real. He thinks he's unknown to me, but I'll pay him off yet," rejoined the Tomtit, with a silent imprecation. "I'll get rid of him, but it mustn't be done here. Now then, Beg, listen: Fetch me a lantern and the key of the— You understand me?"

Beg nodded his head, and flew off with alacrity. No one entertained a greater admiration of the Tomtit than that gentleman; he regarded with the same deference a dog would show to his master, and made no remark as long as he could testify his servile attention; he merely returned with the lantern and key, and to his great surprise found the burglar chief absorbed in the contemplation of the miniature of a young girl, seemingly some seventeen years of age, and of surpassing loveliness, and heard him mutter, "He certainly has good cause to hate me, but I would have spared him had he kept away from the Nest." Now, however, he has rushed upon his doom!" Then becoming aware of the presence, the Tomtit hastily thrust the picture in his bosom, and turning to the inkeeper, whispered:

"Let me out by the back door, Beg." "All right," was the quick response. "Not a word to the boys, mind; if they miss me, tell 'em I've gone to bed." The Tomtit, with this parting caution, made his exit from the door, which Mr. Beg held open, and walked rapidly off.

The faithful custodian of the Burglars' Nest stood for a few minutes listening, till the retreating footsteps of the burglar chief had died away in the distance; then he carefully closed and relocked the door, and returned to the bar, there to muse over the surprising and startling disclosures which had been made to him.

It was one of those remarkable circumstances that sometimes happen in real life, that Mr. Detective Duffy should have unconsciously blundered into the very place he had been searching for vainly the past two years. As he sat quietly eating his supper he little dreamed that a few yards off stood a figure which, the mere sight of, would have moved him to an absolute frenzy; and well it might,—for there was a story connected with that figure, a tale so heart-rending, so terrible, so revolving,—of faith broken, of hospitality abused, of wrongs perpetrated, of an idolized daughter consigned to wretchedness,—that it could not have been passed over. It had left its impress on the care-worn features of that old man, discernible in every lineament; his gray eyes seemed to flash with the same spirit,—of deep, abhorred revenge.

And now those two men were about to meet—the Detective known to the Burglar, the Burglar unknown to the Detective—to engage in a desperate game, the issue of which was to be death to one or both. Intelligence and honesty were to be pitted against cunning and crime. What was to be the result of this fearful struggle and threat of vengeance, we shall be able to see in our next chapter.

The above is all of this story that will be published in our columns. The continuation of it from where it leaves off here can be found only in the New York Ledger, the great family paper, which is for sale at all the stores throughout the city and country, where papers are sold. Remember and ask for the New York Ledger of January 5, and in it you will find the continuation of the story from where it leaves off here.

The Ledger is mailed to subscribers at $2 a year, or two copies for $3. The bills of all good, sound banks in any portion of the Union taken at par. Address your letters to Robert Donner, publisher, 40 Park Row, New York. It is the handsomest and best illustrated paper in the country, elegantly illustrated, and characterized by a high moral tone.