answer to the following :- Ed. Working Farmer. Mr. P. T. Quinn. Dear Sir :- You will oblige by furnishing me with an accurate statement of the operations of the farm for the year 1860, with such remarks as you may consider necessary to the full understanding of your report. Yours, respectfully, JAMES J. MAPES. Yours, respectfully, James J. Mares. Prof. J. J. Mares. Dear Sir:—In compliance with your request, I submit the following statement of receipts and disbursements, together with an account of the improvements made since the farm came into your possession, twelve years ago. The soil is a heavy, decomposed red kellis, with a sub-soil of similar material, nearly impervious to water, abounding in springs, and until exposed for a time to atmospheric influences, quite rock-like in texture, resembling furruginous sand stone; in its natural state nearly sterile, and seldom could be found a more unpromising field than the original 35 acres with which you commenced. These were half covered with weeds, elders, blackberry bushes, stone fences, stretching like great serpents; part effectually defying the approach of plow and cultivator, with large bowlders scattered on and through the soil. Any ordinary zeal would have been deterred from the attempt to turn this tract into a fertile and profitable garden. To rid the ground of these unprofitable denizens, who stubbornly maintained their rights, and to introduce desired vegetation, was a work which demanded time, patience, and investment .-The depth of surface plowing being gradually increased, accompanied by thorough sub-soil plowing, efficient manuring and judicious surface culture, enabled the land to be effectually subdued. After a few experiments it was acertained that under-draining promised profitable results, and therefore the original farm, and at later periods the accessions, were nearly all so treated. By this means, combined with thorough subsoiling, the soil is now in full and efficient tilth, to a depth of eighteen inches, and disturbed to a still greater depth. All this has been produced at much less expense than was originally anticipated, owing to the introduction of improved and labor-saving

During the past ten years the farm has been gradually increased in value by the planting of pear trees, until we now have 5000 in good condition, and with which we have met with the most encouraging success, attributable to the thorough preparation of the soil, and to the proper method of culture having been strictly pursued.

It is essential to the success of fruit trees, that the disintegration of the soil should be thorough before planting them, for the tree once in place, no ingenuity can plow beneath its roots, so as to permit the hungry fibres to de scend; this action cannot be insured without ander draining and sub-soil plowing.

Both before and after putting the trees in place, there should be a plentiful application of morganic manures, for fermentable manures should in no case be applied to any kind of fruit trees. The manures applied to the trees have been always of the inorganic sorts; chiefly consisting of Mapes' Phosphates, and occasionally slight dressings of unleached wood ashes.

After fair trial we have arrived at the conclusion, that our soil and climate are not favorable to the profitable culture of grapes, and are therefore removing, as agreed upon last year, the Vineyard, substituting pear trees in place of the vines. With the current, however, our experience has been far more encouraging. We of course commenced with the Red Dutch, which has become much improved by extra culture, and we intend to plant more of this old kind during the coming year, notwithstanding the excel-lence of the Versailles, which will, before many years, be propagated in sufficient quantities to take preeminence. The Cherry Current was 20t at first very prolific but it bore better last year, and we hope to find it improve greatly by

Our cultivation of the Raspberry has also been crowned with success. The Fastolf. Franconia, Red Autwerp, White Antwerp, being the best marketable varieties; but for immediate use, the Brinkle's Orange is very desirable, being fine flavored, melting, and prolific, though too soft for transportation.

The Lawton Blackberry we have had for six years under cultivation, with great success. In cold, northern exposures, it is liable to be winter-killed. When the fruit is fully ripe it is delicious; but from its extreme acidity, tasting as if a "quart of berries has been sharpened to a pint," before its full maturity, the Lawton has met with some pretty keen rebuffs.

Of Strawberries we have now fifty varieties on trial; of these we are at present inclined to advocate the long approved Hovey's, Wilson's, Hooker's Seedling, and Triomphe de Gand, as the most profitable for market, to which list we will be glad to add others, after another year's trial.

We have thus far preferred to cultivate small fruits for the sake of the fruit itself, but the growing demand for reliable plants is fast persuading us to turn our attention to their propagation.

The purpose of the farm has been steadily directed to the production of fruit and seed, but in order to accomplish this, the produce was at first chiefly that of the market garden. The yield per acre has been steadily upon the increase for these crops; but little by little the favorite plants have encroached upon their enriched demain, until we are nearly confined to the cultivation of fruits and seeds. We have judged it strict economy to use in all cases the best labor saving implements, and the Nitrogenized Super-phosphate of Lime, to which we have no hesitation in ascribing our most profitable

Portions of the land now in grass, are maintained in good condition by top a dressing of two hundred pounds of phosphate per acre. If the grass should give any indication of running out. the subsoil plow is run through, in lines four feet apart. This loosens the soil, the grass immediately begins to tiller, and the field is restored. In connection with the fertilizers enumerated below, we have availed ourselves of all manures produced upon the farm.
