Let us suppose a barn-yard to be 100 by 80 feet, then with a rain-fall of 25 inches per annum, the quantity of rain falling on such a barn-yard would be 103.868 gallons, weighing nearly 464 tons. Much of this would necessarily run off, carrying with it the more progressed, and therefore the more soluble inorganic constituents of the manure, and after full allowance for evaporation, still many tons would be absorbed by the straw, costing at least twenty cents per ton if carted for a quarter of a mile. When manures are properly taken care of under sheds, they become concentrated, more thoroughly decomposed, and without any loss by washing; the loss by evaporation is but slight, as they present so small an area from which the evaporation can occur, while the cartage of manures so prepared is reduced materially in cost. In the open barn-yard the litter is not decomposed until after the farther composting of the mass, requiring handling, cartage, etc., all of which are materially increased by the immense amount of water, present, while the covered shed system, we have so often recommended, secures the decomposition of the manure during its accumulation, and without loss, giving a minimum hulk in the best condition for use. We have frequently described the manure shed, but for the purpose of illustrating some of the principles named above, we will repeat in part its plan of construction. The base on which the compost heap is to be placed should sink slightly below the level of the soil, and be faced with clay or other substance, giving a smooth bed and varying from a level, so as to cause an easy flow toward a cistern sunk at the lowest end. In this cistern should be a partition, so that any pieces of litter falling in would remain on the same side of the partition, while the more fluid portions would pass through holes near its bottom, and so occupy the opposite side. In this section should be placed a chain or other single pump, by which the fluid drainage of the manure heap could be carried back two or three times a week to the top of the heap; indeed, this pump may be so arranged as to be frequently at work by a windmill; the quantity to be pumped is not large, and therefore a very cheap contrivance is capable of doing the work. On this heap may be thrown all the weeds of the farm, all the manure from the stables, while the fluid manures may pass in gutters under ground from the stables to the fluid cistern; similar pipes may convey all the waste waters of the house to this cistern; muck, leaves from the woods, head-lands, and a vaniety of other wastes may find their way to this compost heap. The continued pumping and consequent repeated passage downward of the fluid drainage through the mass, will secure not only the necessary decomposition without firefanging or over-heating, but by dissolving the inorganic portions as fast as they are liberated, disseminate them through those layers which are of less value. Swamp-muck, river-mud, head-lands, and like materials occupying a strata in such a heap, will be continually receiving the parts rendered soluble from the dung of animals, until the whole mass will be rendered homogeneous. The advantages do not cease here, for the continued change of position of all these constituents produces new chemical conditions in every part of the heap; so that all seeds are decomposed and the farm thus kept clean. Pernicious results, such as occur when sulphuretted hydrogen is liberated, are pre-A small quantity of sulphuric acid may occasionally be introduced into this cistern, for changing the carbonates of ammonia into the sulphate, so as to do away with their volatile character. Manures thus prepared are suited to all uses.

while those from the open barn-yard can be used only in special cases. If no other advantage should arise than that consequent upon the thorough decomposition of weed seeds—not possible in the open barn-yard practice-this alone would warrant the erection of manure sheds. In properly constructed stables, the results of which are to pass into the manure shed, the amount of litter consumed is materially less than in the open barn yard practice, while the quality of the resulting manure is better. Potash, soda, lime, and many other constituents which may be required by the peculiar condition of the farm, may find their way in moderate quantities to this compost heap, and be so evenly disseminated through the mass, as to feed plants without destroying their finer roots and spongioles, from want of a sufficient amount of division. In Flanders this plan is, with some modifications, carried out extensively: large amounts of water are passed in the cistern and pumped upon the mass, so that all the manure may be carried out in fluid form from the tank; the whole compost heap eventually decomposes, or rather by continued addition and continued decomposition, the mass remains the same, while the valuable portion, in the highest possible condition for assimilation, may be taken as needed from this tank, in a form capable of being applied not only before the planting of crops, but during their growth. All parts of the field may thus be rendered alike, even where the soil may differ, the poorer portions receiving the larger amount of this fluid manure. Such a large heap, properly manip-ulated, gives off no offensive gases to annoy animals or man, while the open barn-yard is a nnisance scarcely to be tolerated. A field put down to grass with compost manure so prepared, will be even in texture and quality, while one supplied with rough manure from the open barn yard will be found to vary, not only in the kinds of grass, but in their quality.

CHERRIES.—There is much less attention paid to the cultivation of choice varieties of cherries, among farmers, than there should be. In viewing large farms, we too seldom see a proper supply of this fruit, which is so easily obtained. No fruit tree requires less attention than the cherry. In two or three years at most it begins to bear, and rarely fails thereafter to produce a crop. The cherry tree should be firmly staked, when transplanted, and kept so for at least three years; care should also be taken not to bruise the stem either when setting out or at any time afterward. The practice sometimes resorted to, by inconsiderate persons, to shake down the fruit, of jarring the trunk with the boot and lacerating the bark, is a most pernicious one, and almost always permanently injures the tree, if it does not eventually destroy it. Except the birds, the cherry has few enemies.

and these, so far as we are concerned, are welcome to one-half the crop. We never complain when they do not take more. Indeed, we cultivate cherries in full partnership with the feathery tribe; but we sometimes think when they have the dividing of the crop, that they take a little more than their share!

At nearly all our nurseries, the following varieties of the cherry can be obtained: 1. Early Purple Guigne; 2. Mayduke; 3. Early Richmond; 4. Governor Wood; 5. Elton; 6. Black Eagle; 7. Black Tartarian; 8. Knight's Early Black; 9. Downtown; 10. Bigarreau; 11. Downer's Late.

Here are eleven sorts; the lot will not cost over six dollars, and they will, in three years from setting out, furnish a supply of cherries of the highest quality, in an abundance sufficient for any family for domestic use. After three years, a thousand pounds can be sent to market, with anything like a crop.—Germantown Tel

I beg leave to call the attention of the citizens of the Unnted States to the above Wines and Liquors, imported by Undlend Wolfe, of New York, whose name is familiar in every part of this country for the purity of his celebrated Schiedam Schafps. Mr. Wolfe, in his letter to me, speaking of the purity of his Wines and Liquors, says: "I will stake my reputation" as a dence in the City of New York, that all the Brandy resi dence in the City of New York and of the best quality, and can be relied upon by every purchaser." Every bottle has the proprietor's name on the wax, and a fac simile of his signature on the certificate. The public are respectfully invited to call and examine for themselves. For sale at Retall by all Apothecaries and Grocers in Philadelphia.

GEORGE H. ASHTON,

No. 832 Market street, Philadelphia.

Read the following from the New York Diezens that there is one place in our city where the physician, apothecary, and country merchant, can go and purchase pure Wines and Liquors, as pure as imported, and of the best quality.

We do not intend to give an elaborate description of this merchant's extensive business, although it will well repay any stranger or citizen to visit Upolpho Wolff's extensive warehouse, Nos. 18, 20 and 22, Beaver street, and Nos 17, 19 and 21, Marketfield street. His stock of Rchnapps on hand ready for shipment could not have been less than twiy thousand cases; the Brandy, Swine some very

Liquors.

We understand Mr. Wolfs, for the accommodation of We understand Mr. Wolffs, for the accommodation of small dealers in the country, puts up assorted cases of Wines and Liquors. Such a man, and such a merchant, should be sustained against his tens of thousands of op-ponents in the United States, who sell nothing but imi-tations, ruinous slike to human health and happiness. For sale by C. K. KELLER, Druggist, sole agent for Harrisburg.
