FASHIONABLE PIETY IN PARIS.

The Paris correspondent of the New York Express, writing under date of March 15th, Says:

I remember having read, some time ago, in the Express, a lively paragraph descriptive of a new fashion, just then inaugurated in New York, under the designation of "religious matinees." If the name alone did not bear a Parisian odor sufficiently strong to convince you that this mode is only of exotic growth in the Empire City of America, I could tell you that it originated here, and was invented as an aristocratic and exclusive plan of observing Lent, combining piety with amusement. Forty days and nights abstention from wordly distractions, in the very heighth of the gay season, is a great deprivation to the pleasure-loving Parisians; and, as dancing is rigorously tabooed in the drawing-rooms of the noblesse, some sort of diversion must supply the place of Terpsichore, or our fashionables would perish of ennui.

In this trying emergency, it was natural to have recourse to the consolations of religion; and the happy idea of morning prayer meetings, organized in such a manner as to banish the vulgar herd from all participation in these select gatherings of the faithful, has now been definitely adopted by the Faubourg St. Germain, whose titled denizens may be compared in an humble way, with the princes of your Fifth avenue. Instead of mingling with the greasy throng which flocks to Notre Dame, or the Madeleine, to listen to the exhortations of renowned pulpit actors expressly engaged to enliven the public performances in those temples, the Duchess de This or the Marchioness de That arranges the programme of her little private representation, secures the services of such a sensation preacher as is most certain to draw, and proceeds to issue cards, precisely as for a ball or concert. It is proper to add, that, when the entertainment offered promises well, the acquaintances of the Duchess and the Marchioness accept the invitation with pious alacrity.

The Parisian religious matinee accordingly begins at two P. M. and ends at six, with intervals for refreshments. Ladies come in walking costumes, or in elaborate evening dress, if they intend to dine out, after the sermon. It must not be supposed that the attention of the company is exclusively devoted to spiritual matters and the absorption of ices and cordials. The first and last hours of the meeting are consecrated to politico-religious conversation, m which the sufferings of the church of course occupy the place of honor, sharing generously, bowever, with the " trials of our beloved sovereign"-who, I need scarcely remark, is not the present tenant of the Tuilleries. This year, the three principal objects of worship, during these colloquial episodes, are His Majesty, (without a throne,) Henry V., His Holiness, (likely soon to follow suit,) Pius IX., and that touching young martyr of the Italian Reign of Terror, Bomba II. The sermon fills the centre of the programme like the singing and dancing a theatre bill. The preacher -invariably an Abbe of ferociously papist proclivties—carefully select such a texts as will anable him to denounce the Pontius Pilates of the nineteenth century, or, if likely to produce a. more vivid sensation, afford occasion to launch forth into a philippic levelled at the blemishes and weaknesses of society.

At a late reunion of this character held at ibe-residence of a noble lady of the noble Faubourg, one of the most celebrated preachers of thr day, Father F., pronounced a discourse against the extravagance of female dress, and the undiminished proportions of crinoline.-Upon this inexhaustable theme the eloquent Abbe thundered away in splendid style, repeating many things already said, over and over again, by the enemies of female prodigality, but conferring upon somewhat stale arguments the stamp of his own brilliant imagery and studied gesticulation. As a matter of course, such a sermon was well timed, delivered as it was before a congregation principally composed of dames dressed in the extreme of luxary and fashion. Of the fifty or sixty persons present, fully three-fourths were ladies, and iney alone-or rather their crinolines-sufficed to fill one of those immense drawing rooms which no longer exist in Paris except in its ancient and aristocratic mansions. Father F. dealt his rhetorical blows without mercy amid the elegant throng, buried in costly laces, and sparkling diamonds. He drew a vivid picture of the disastrous consequences entailed  $\mathbf{\hat{b}y}$  love of dress; fortunes compromised or entirely destroyed; wives encumbering their husbands with enormous debts; loss of credit and social position: eleventh hour repentance, &c., &. "If I am correctly informed." said the ora tor, "there are ladies within the sound of my voice who purchase as many as fifty dresses in a single year. With the materials used in making these dresses of extravagant dimensions, a hundred more of reasonable measure might be manufactured, and these, with proper care, sught to last a lifetime." This matter-of-fact calculation naturally excited a general smile among the fair auditory ; observing which, the preacher exclaimed, in prophetic tones, "beware, my hearers! The gates of Paradise are narrow, and you will never be able to pass them with your crinolines !" An outburst of this sort might produce a wholesome effect in your latitude, but the ob-duracy of our sinful Parisiennes is such that I fear the good Abbe's terrible warning was quite thrown away upon his listeners, who belonged to a nation not famous for giving itself much concern about tomorrow, or the day after. I will not, however, go so far as to assert that Parisian ladies are utterly hardened in their wickedness, for, when Father F. turned his attention to the dreadful crime of private theatricals, (almost as prevalent, at this season, as religious matinees,) the Countess de B. silently left the room, whispering to the mistress of the house the following excellent apology for her precipitate departure: "I am going before the end of the sermon, for fear I shall be converted if I remain, which would be rather enfortunate, to-day, as I have two parts to play at the Marquise de M.'s to-night, and could not think of causing a disappointment. You will be at the Marquis's of course, so I shall merely say au revoir." AN INSTANCE OF MR. RABEY'S PRACTICE .-The Boston Transcript mentions the following instance of Mr. Rarey's system in practice : A horse attached to an omnibus, while passing through Court street yesterday, became con-trary and refused to proceed. The driver tried the whip without success, and all his efforts to -start the animal proved unavailing. Another driver reproved the hero of the lash for his want of knowledge of horse-flesh, and undertook to start the team. He patted the refrac-tory horse on his head and neck, took up his forefoot, and followed Mr. Rarey's advice in such cases. Three minutes of this treatment answered the purpose, and the horse started along when solicited. The crowd, which had collected during these proceedings, cheered the man who had conquered the contrary horse by the new and humane method.
