extracts from which will be interesting:
"Taking all things into consideration," says E. P. Barnes, of Pharsalia, N. Y., "I think fall planting the best. The planter then has more time to prepare his land, and get it in good condition for setting the trees. Fall planting, too, gives the soil a chance to settle around the roots, so that the trees are at home and ready for growing, as soon as the warm weather comes, in the spring." A well known writer of Massachusetts takes a different view of the matter. He prefers spring planting. ·· After severing the trees in autumn from the vital heat of the earth, they are exposed to the severity of winter before having time to recover it again by summer growth. To an extent, the sap circulates in trees in the winter; and it has been shown that the temperature of their central wood never runs so high or so low as the surrounding air, but keeps nearly within the range of 40 and 60 degrees Fah. Hence trees, when planted in the fall-in latitude 42 and north of it-are more likely to be winter killed than when planted in the spring, as they are deprived of the warmth of their mother As a general rule, the spring is undoubtedly the safest time to plant all trees; though some fruit trees will live in latitude 42 deg. when set in the fall, as every one well knows. Apple trees are of this class. But those trees whose wood is spongy and formed rapidly, grow late, or have been much forced. are unsafe planted in the autumn, as the violence of transportation suddenly cuts them off (as before hinted) from warmth, particularly necessary for their preservation. Shearing lamb in December would not be so impolitic. Peach and apricot trees very rarely live when set in autumn; cherry trees may possibly, and sometimes pear trees do tolerably well. But since I have lost several valuable ones of the latter, when thus planted, from one place to another in my garden, I dare not venture only on the poorest; and then am careful to get up as much soil with the roots as possible. Set in the spring, I have never lost a tree of any kind, except eight plum trees, bought at auction, whose death I do not regret." F. H. H. also prefers spring planting. He says:

"In taking up a tree, the roots are more or less mutilated, and the tree enfeebled; and when set out in the fall, less able to withstand the rigors of winter, more liable to heave out with the frost, and to be blown down by the wind. It is sometimes said, by fall setting the tree becomes more firm and the earth settled about the roots, and consequently will start earlier in the spring. But the same end may be obtained by early spring planting, before the heavy rains, or by watering at the time of planting.

W. Alexander, of Michigan, prefers to plant in the fall, especially when the trees have to be obtained from a distant nursery.

C. G. Brown, of Wisconsin, also advocates fall planting. Sometimes trees planted in the fall are injured by the "harder freezing of the ground where it has been disturbed; but this difficulty may be easily remedied by covering the roots with a greater depth of earth than it is intended shall remain upon them."--Genesee Farmer.

How to RAISE CELERY .- A description of celery is unnecessary for most of those who live in our near cities, where it has long been a staple article for the table, but is as yet cultivated in comparatively few farmers' gardens. It is a native of England, where it grows as a rank, coarse weed, in marshy grounds. By cultivation, the best stocks, which are edible, have been rendered crisp and delicate, of a most agreeable flavor, and equal or superior to any other plant for salads. It is also used as flavoring for soup and made dishes. When once generally known, it will be considered as indispensable in the garden as lettuce or cabbage. It is usually eaten in fall and winter; by proper management it may be had from August to April.

To raise celery for summer use, a hot bed is needed, which should be prepared, in this latitude, as early as the second week in March .-After the hot bed is made in the usual manner, but with about twelve inches of soil upon the manure, allow it to stand ten or twelve days for the weeds to spring up, which can then be destroyed, and the bed kept clean with little trouble. Make drills six inches apart by pressing the edge of a board into the soil an inch deep, and sow the seed. The solid white variety is generally preferred. When the plants are up, thin them to an inch apart. Air them a short time each morning; keep them shaded with mats on clear days from about 10 A. M. to 4 P. M. Water with cold water about twice a week, applying it at noon, and immediately replace the mats. Hoe between the rows to keep out weeds, only when the plants and soil are dry; otherwise they become rusted and are spoiled for after culture. When about three inches high, or near the first of May, they are ready for transplanting. It is well to give more air, to harden them off, a few days before removing them.

Dig trenches one foot wide, two feet deep and four to five feet apart. Put in six inches of well rotted cattle or hog manure, fill in with six inches of soil, and mix the whole thoroughly. Choose a clear day, water the beds freely an hour or more before transplanting, that the earth may adhere to the plants. Fork over the prepared soil in the trenches, and leave the middle rounded up higher than the sides .--Put in the young plants twelve inches apart, and shade them for a few days to prevent wilt-

Hoe them occasionally to keep out weeds, but only in dry weather, and when the leaves are free from dew, and always be careful to keep all earth from the centre of the plant; otherwise · it will rust and be spoiled. Draw in earth enough from the sides of the trench to cover the lateral roots three inches deep, but do not draw together the heart of the plant while young. If drouth occur, frequent hoeing is better than watering. When eight or ten stalks are formed, and the tallest is eighteen inches high, draw in earth from the sides, and bank up the plant as high as the first outside leaf-draw the stalks together, while doing this, and be careful to keep earth out of the centre. When the heart has grown up even with the outside leaves, give a second earthing, drawing it up so that the bank stands about two feet high. As soon as the heart reaches to the outer leaves again, the celery is ready for use. It will attain this point about thirty days after the first baking.

For fall and winter celery, choose a rich, sandy loam, and enrich it with plenty of good manure, thoroughly worked into the soil. Sow the seed in drills a foot apart, the same as directed above. Thin them to about half an inch apart. Hoe frequently to keep down weeds and supply moisture, but never while the dew is on. The plants will be ready for the trenches about the first of July, after which the treatment is the same as described above. Further directions for digging, preparing for the table, preserving for winter, etc., will be given at the appropriate season. Many of these hints are derived from a treatise by Mr. Roessle, probably the must successful cultivator of celery in this country.
