TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 23, 1861.

THE LAST DAYS OF CHARLES II. OF SPAIN.

The prince on whom so much depended was the most miserable of human beings. In old times he would have been exposed as soon as he came into the world, and to expose him would have been a kindness.

From his birth a blight was on his body, and on his mind. With difficulty his almost imperceptible spark of life had been screened and fanned into a dim and flickering flame.

His childhood, except when he could be rocked and sung into sleepy sleep, was one long, piteous wail. Till he was ten years old his days were passed on the laps of women, and he was never once suffered to stand on his rickety legs.

None of those lawny little urchins, clad in rags stolen from scarecrows, whom Marillo loved to paint begging or rolling in the sand, owed love to education than this despotic ruler of 80,000,000 of subjects.

The most important events in the history of his kingdom, the very names of provinces and cities which were among his most valuable possessions, were unknown to him. It may well be doubted whether he was aware that Sicily was an island, that Christopher Columbus had discovered America, or that the English were not Mohammedans.

In his youth, however, though too imbecile for study or business, he was not incapable of being amused. He shot, hunted and fished. He enjoyed with the delight of a true Spaniard two delightful spectacles: a horse with its bowels gored out and a Jew writhing in the fire.

The time came when the mightiest of instincts ordinarily wakens from its repose. It was hoped that the young king would not prove invincible to female attractions, and that he would leave a Prince of Asturias to succeed him.

A consort was found for him in the royal family of France, and her beauty and grace gave him a languid pleasure. He liked to adorn her with jewels, to see her dance, and to tell her what sport he had with his dogs and falcons.

But it was soon whispered that she was a wife only in name. She died, and her place was supplied by a German princess nearly allied to the imperial house. But the second marriage, like the first, proved barren, and long before the king had passed the prime of life all the politicians of Europe had begun to take it for granted in all their calculations that he would be the last descendant in the male line of Charles V.

Meanwhile a sullen and abject melancholy took possession of his soul. The diversions which had been the serious employment of his youth became distasteful to him. He ceased to find pleasure in his nets and bear spears, in the fandango and the bullfight. Sometimes he shut himself up in an inner chamber from the eyes of his courtiers. Sometimes he loitered alone, from sunrise to sunset, in the dreary and rugged wilderness which surrounds the Escorial. The hours which he did not waste in listless idleness were divided between childish sports and childish devotions. He delighted in rare animals, and still more in dwarfs. When neither strange beasts nor little men—dwarfs and children—were to be had, he would sit for hours with his feet on a stool, and his hands on his knees, and he would gaze at the ceiling of his chamber, and he would think of the things he had heard to utter, the desperate things he had been known to do, all assisted by the honor, interest and duty of Kentucky untried her with the South.

When the murder was discovered in the course of the next day, suspicion was at once excited that he had been her assassin. His wild course of life and frequent quarrels with his mother were well known; the brutal threats he had been heard to utter, the desperate things he had been known to do, all assisted by the honor, interest and duty of Kentucky untried her with the South.
