Privateer General Armstrong.

Thine is the name I breath to heaven

When bent in silent prayer.

The news of the state of things existing at Lisbon, between the Portuguese government and the American squadron there, gives a particular interest to the affair of the privateer General Armstrong, destroyed by British naval force at Fayal in 1814, and now intimetely connected, as one of its causes, with the misunderstanding, so likely, it would appear, to lead to a serious rupture between the two countries. For this reason, we have supposed we should be doing our readers a favor by laying before them a history of the General Armstrong, and of the most gallant of all the naval feats of the war of 1812, so full of unparallelled achievements; and to insure still more interest, we (published in London.) in which it appeared at the time. We believe it to be a correct, as it is certainly a very impartial account, the circumstances agreeing pretty closely with the American descriptions, of on fire, cur on the Englishman's side, being rather to the advantage of the General Armstong than otherwise; as where he speaks of four-The following are some of our prices, to new assortment of Morocco and Binding | teen launches attacking the privateer, in-Leather, Lasts, Shoe-thread, Wooden Pegs stead of twelve, the number put down in the

A warm contest ensued on both sides. The boats were finally dispersed, with great loss. The American, now calculating on a very superior force being sent, cut his cables and rowed the privateer close in alongside of the fort, within half cable's length, where he moored her, head and stern, with four lines. The governor now sent a -remonstrance to Capt. Lloyd, of the Plantagenet, against such proceedings, and trusted the privateer would not be further molested; she being in the dominions of Portugal, and under the guns of the castle, was entitled to Portuguese protection. Capt. Lloyd's answer was, that he was determined to destroy the vessel, at the expense of all Fayal; and should any protection be given her by the port, he would not leave a house standing in the village. All the inhabitants were gathered about the walls, expecting a renewal of the attack.-At midnight, fourteen launches were discovered to be coming, in rotation, for the pur-

a tremendous and effectual discharge was made from the privateer, which threw the boats into confusion. They now returned a spirited fire ; but the privateer kept up so continual a discharge, it was almost impos-sible for the boats to make any progress.— They finally succeeded, after immense loss, to get alongside of her, and attempted to board at every quarter, cheered by the offivers, with a shout of "no quarter," which we could distinctly hear, as well as their shricks and cries. The termination was near about a total massacre. Three of the boats were stink, and but one poor solitary officer escaped death, in a boat that contained fifty souls: he was wounded. The Americans fought with great firmness. Some of the boats were left without a single man to row them; others with three or four; the most that dny one returned with was about ten. Several boats floated on shore full of dead bodies. With great reluctance I state, that they were manned with picked men, and commanded by the first, second, third and fourth lieutenants of the t'lantagenet,-the first, second, third and fourth of the frigate-and the first officers of the brig-together with a great number of midshipmen. Our whole force exceeded 400 men; but three officers escaped, two of which are wounded. This bloody and unfortunate contest lasted about forty minutes. After the boats gave out, nothing more was attempted till daylight next morning. when the Carnation hauled alongside and engaged het. The privateet continued to make a most gallant defence. These vete: rans reminded me of Lawrence's dying words, of the Chesapeake—"Don't give up the ship!" The Carnation lost one of her topmasts, and her yards were shot away. She was much cut up in rigging, and received several severe shot in her hull.-This obliged her to haul off to repair, and to cease firing. The Americans now, finding their prinipal gun (Long Tom) and several others dismounted, deemed it folly to think of saving her against so superior a force; they therefore cut away her masts to the deck; blew a hole through her bottom, took out give a British account, being the narrative of an English resident at Fayal, an eye witness who wrote it for Cobbet's Register, the hull of the privateer, although much
