McDonough, the Miser Millionaire.

A former acquaintance of John McDonough, the millionaire who died lately in N. Orleans, furnishes the Newark Advertiser with the following reminiscences of him:

He resided, for many years of the latter part fo his life, in Algiers, a village on the opposite side of the Mississippi to New Orleans, where he cultivated and maintained the strictest habits of industry and economy. His custom was to visit the city daiservants row him over. The foundation of his fortune was laid by the transfer of Louisiana to the United States when a large tract where New Orleans is now located known to have a friend-call-upon-him ex- over-all. cept on business, which he would compet less his time would be occupied with something which would not result in his pecuniary advantage.

The old gentleman whom he employed to collect his rents. &c., was not even allowed to have his brother call on him, lest as Mc Donough alleged, it would cost him an extra meal. His apparel, when in the city. was always neat and clean, but bore the unmistakeable evidence of being very ancient. So particular was he to save his clothes from the usual wear, that he has been known frequently to take off his linen on his return from the city, and replace it with that which was of less value. The umbrella which he invariably carried with him was said to have been found by him during his services in Gen, Jackson's campaign against the Indian tribes .- When he put on a new coat, it was noticed and made the subject of familiar conversation among business men throughout the city, as a matter of astonishment.

A few years ago, a nephew visited him, and was told he need not repeat his visits, as it was expensive, and he subsequently died in the Charity Hospital, his uncle contributing nothing towards his funeral expenses. On one occasion, he applied to the Legislature for the passage of an act appointing himself executor to his own estate, by which he intended to save the usual fee of two and a half per cent, to the Probate Court. In answer to his petition, the Legislature replied, that if he would make affidavit that he was dead, they would act favorably upon

Much is said about his liberating his slives, and an erroneous impression is gone abroad in relation to it. When he pure thsed one, he at once opened an account with him, charging his cost, expenses of clothing, &c., and crediting him with the money received for his wages, and when the slave had paid him his first cost, expenses and interest of money, with a fair consideration for risks, &c., he gave him his freedom, provided the Colonization Society would take charge of him,

The Population of the Cities.

The rapidity with which the country is filling up with population may be inferred from the growth of the cities. New York presents some interesting results :—In 1820 over 500,000-or four times as large as it there was thirty years ago. If it goes on at this rate, it will, before the century is out, have its population number several millions. There are but three cities in Europe with a superior or equal population to New York now. These three cities are-London, with a population of 2,007,540 in 1834, now undoubtedly increased to 2,225,000; Paris, with 1,053,904 in 1846, but since reduced much below a million by the revolutions and distresses of 1848; and Constantinople, 900, 000 in 1814, with one of its suburbs in Asia. There are in China and Japan several cities with a population estimated at a million and upwards; but these, with Constantinople, are without the bound of Christendom of the civilized world

St. Petersburg is now the European city next interior to New York in population, containing 473,000 people in 1846, and but slowly increasing since, if at all. The three next-Vienna, with 429,500 in 1846; Berlin, with 420,000 in March 1848; and Naples, with 400,818, in 1844—have each lost not less than a quarter of their population, from cholera, revolution, civil war, and consequent emigration, since April, 1848-Baltimore American.

The following is the proclamation of Governor Johnston, fixing the 12th day of December, as a day of thanksgiving :

The Chances of Marriage.

We have before us some curious statistion in relation to Marriage. They have been gathered from various sources. According to the "Register General of England," a la dy's chance of getting married is at its maximum, between the ages of twenty and twenty-five!-Before twenty, a lady has but one fifth, and from 20 to 25, one third of that maximum chance. After thirty, her chance gradually dwindles, away, and hence we may infer that there are so few ladies who ever go beyond that age. Men it is urged, marry later than women; and yet it appears, according to the figures, that the great majority of marriages are concocted while both parties are under 25. This, however will l not excite surprise with any one who has spaid the slightest attention to the progress and development of the feelings, the affections and the impulses. The young are generally sanguine and enthusiastic; and inasmuch as the "sexes" are apt to associate more ultimately and more confidentially between the ages of 20 and 25 than at any other period of life-inasmuch as that is emphatically the marriageable season, and that men generally determine upon some regular and fixed occupation by that time, the chances of marriage, within the period alluded to, are, of course, more numerous. But, let even the susceptible pass over 25-let them experience one or two disappointments of the heart-let them grow ambitious of wealth or of power, and matrimony immediately becomes a secondary condition. The heart grows cold-the disposition cautious -- and thus new tastes, new habits and new associations are imbided, and the society of the gentler sex is comparatively neglected. It appears, however, that men retains the power of contracting matrimony to a later age than women; for out of 27.483 single 202,589; in 1840 it was 312,852; in 1835 who were married in 1848 there was only it was 371,228, and now it is supposed to be one spinster above 60 years of age, whereas

> A widower, it would seem, selects a more steady age than a bachelor; while on the contrary, a widow prefers that her second husband, shall be younger than herself. It thus appears that of widows above fifty, who contract a second marriage, more than three-fourths are united to men under fifty. "Samivel! Samivel! be careful of the vid-But it also appears, that as the chances of marriage decrease, the ages of the new partners are found to increase. On a rough calculation, the number of marriages "in which widows appear as principals is about nine per cent, of the whole annual number, and those in which the bride grooms are widowers about fourteen per cent of the whole. It might be supposed, therefore, that more widowers contracted alliances with spinsters than bachelors with widows; but, independently of this, it appears that more widows found widowers for partners than bachelors, a fact which illustrates the old apothegm, that "Tis sympathy makes friends." Many other curious facts are given, to which we may refer hereafter. The subject, we are aware, is always interesting. In France, "the business of matrimony" is, in many cases, systematized, and on very mercenary and calculative principles. Thus
