Personal Identity.
The following curious cases showing the mistakes which may sometimes occur in the identity of an individual, are copied from an English paper:
"A young gentleman articled to an attorney in London, was tried on five indictments for different acts of theft. A person resembling the prisoner in size and general appearance had called at various shops in the metropolis, for the purpose of looking at jewelry, books, and other articles, with the pretended intention of making purchases but made off with the property placed before him, while the shopkeepers were engaged in looking out other articles. In each of these cases the prisoner was positively identified by several persons, while in a majority of them an alibi was clearly and positively established, and the young man was proved to be of orderly habits and irreproachable character, and under no temptation from want of money, to resort to acts of dishonesty. Similar deceptions on other tradesmen had been committed by a person resembling the prisoner, and those persons proved that, though there was a considerable resemblance to the prisoner, he was not the person who had robbed them. The prisoner was convicted on one indictment, but acquitted on all the others; and the judge and jurors who tried the three last cases, expressed their conviction that the prisoner had been mistaken, and that the prosecutors had been robbed by another person resembling the prisoner. A pardon was immediately procured in respect of that charge on which the conviction had taken place.
Not many months before the last mentioned case, a respectable young man was tried for a highway robbery, committed in the neighborhood of Bethnal Green, in which neighborhood both he and the prosecutor resided. The prosecutor swore positively that the prisoner was the man who robbed him of his watch. The counsel for the prisoner called a genteel young woman, to whom the prisoner had proposed addresses who gave evidence who proved a complete alibi. The prosecutor was then ordered out of Court, and in the interval another young man, of the name of Greenwood, who avoided his trial on a capital charge of felony, was introduced, and placed by the side of the prisoner. The prosecutor was again placed in the witness box, and addressed thus:—Remember, sir, the life of this young man depends upon your reply to the question I am about to put. Will you swear again that the young man at the bar is the person who assaulted you? The witness turned his head towards the dock, when beholding two men so nearly alike, he became petrified with astonishment, dropped his hat, and was speechless for a time, but at length declined swearing to either. The young man was of course acquitted. Greenwood was tried for another offence, and executed; and a few hours before his death acknowledged that he had committed the robbery with which the other was charged.

The Mother's First Duty.
I would wish every mother to pay attention to the difference between a course of action, adopted in compliance with the authority, and between a conduct pursued for the sake of another.
The first proceeds from reasoning; the second flows from affection. The first may be abandoned, when the immediate cause may have ceased to exist; it did not depend upon circumstances, or accidental considerations, but is founded in a moral and constant principle.
In the case now before us, if the infant does not disappoint the hope of the mother, it will be a proof, first of affection, secondly, of confidence.
Of affection—for the earliest, and the most innocent wish to please, is that of the infant to please the mother. If it be questioned, whether that wish can at all exist in one so little advanced in development, I would again as I do upon almost all occasions, appeal to the experience of mothers.
It is a proof, also, of confidence. Whenever an infant has been neglected; when the necessary attention has not been paid to its wants; and when, instead of the smile of kindness, it has been treated with the frown of severity; it will be difficult to restore it to that quiet and amiable disposition, in which it will wait for the gratification of its desires without impatience, and enjoy it without greediness.
If affection and confidence have once gained ground in the heart, it will be the first duty of the mother to do every thing in her power to encourage, to strengthen, and to elevate this principle.—Pestalozzi.
To injure a man's sight, there is nothing worse than sudden wealth. Let a woodsawyer draw a ten thousand dollar prize and in less than a month he will not be able to recognize even the man who used to "go security for him."
