Pour DESIRE, June 17, 1851.

DEAR SIR :--- Trilling events have happened to me since my last letter from Montevideo. Our snug little steamship is now a total wreck, lying at this place, in wild barren country not inhabited. We left Montevideo with fair prospect of a good vovage through the straits, but the hand of Providence ordered differently. It was on f May the 19th we left Montevideo, bound to Valparaiso, and had pleasant weather until the evening of the 24th of May, when a heavy sea and wind impeded our propress. Preparations were made for our safety, which are common in these latitudes and in this season, to reef all sails and put the vessels under snug sail. The gale intreased to a tempest, and our craft cracked and bounced like a little shell on the wave. The morning of the 25th the wind fell a little, with the sea running mountains high and a very ugly cross-choped sea striking our little vessel on all sides so as to make her unmanageable. It was found she would not answer her helm, and the seas breaking over us filled the engine room almost so as to disable our machinery. The wheelhouses were stove in by the sea, and in the afternoon at 10 minutes to 3 o'clock, we broached to, and were hove down on our beam ends, and the only resource was to cut the masts away, when she righted and came on even keel once again. The time she was on her beams and was about fifteen i minutes; she was steady and that was all that saved us. Being about three hundred miles off land, and this place the nearest. the captain and officers run her in here .----This is a place for "digging guano." We found a Mr. Powell here, and ten miles distant he has a gang of men digging guano.----At Sea Bear Bay there is a good anchorage, and there are four or five vessels down there waiting for their cargo of guano. Thus end my California prospects. Our ship was condemned for survey, by the captain and officers, and they reported to the crew in writing aft on the quarter deck, that the ship was hogged, broken down under the unachinery, and leaving twenty-four inches in the twenty-four hours ; and also, that they considered her matit for service and miseaworthy .--- They directed that every thing ' that could be saved should be taken care of, and that should procure a passage, all hands, and embark for the United States. We are now busy in breaking the wreck to pieces to get the engine and machinery cut. of the "first men" of Bremen, which we with such other property as is to be re- translate for The Tribune. moved.
