Miscellaneous Selections.

Finding the Right One.

My experience in the realms of love deem me suspicious. I feared that I could never be happy, according to my idea of happiness which my neighbor friend characterized as "reposing in the shade of a pair of slippers." I was in low spirits; and accordingly, one day, set off in my own sulky, to amuse myself by a drive.

I drove a considerable distance to the house of an old friend, who had been a fellow-student with me at the Military College at Carberg, and who had often invited me to visit him. He was now married and was in fact the father of eight children. A large family, I thought at first; but not one too many, said I to myself, after a single day spent in this family, which had given me the impression of a heaven upon earth.

The mistress of the house, the wife and mother, was the silent soul of all. "It is she—it is she who is my happiness," said the fortunate husband, but she said: "It is he; it is he!"

"My dear friend," said I to him one day "how have you managed to be so happy in your marriage?"

"Oh," replied he, smiling, "I have a secret to tell you."

"A secret! for goodness sake, what is it?"

"From my youth upward," he replied, "I have prayed God to give me a good wife."

"Yes," thought I to myself, "that is it!—Here am I unmarried, because I have never discovered this secret, without God's especial direction I may not venture to choose my wife."

A younger sister of my friend's wife lived in the family. No one would have been attracted to her eternal charms, but a short time brought you completely under the spell of her kindness, the intellectual expression of her countenance, and the cheerful friendliness of her manners. All the household love her; she was kind and amiable to all. To myself, however, it seemed that there was an exception: I thought her somewhat cold and distant. I was grieved by this: a short time convinced me that I had really fallen in love with this young lady.

There was, however, a great difference between this and my former love affairs.—Formerly, I had permitted external charms to lead and blind me; now, on the contrary, I was attracted to the soul, and its beauty alone had captivated my heart. But why, then, was so excellent a soul, so cold toward me?

My friend said that it was because Maria had heard me represented as a fickle young fellow: one who amused himself, with broken alliances. Righteous Heaven! was that indeed one of my faults? I fickle?—I who felt myself created as a model of fidelity. It was impossible for me to bear patiently so cruel an injustice. No! as truly as my name was Constantine, must Maria do me justice.

From that time, as she retired from me, she began to walk after her. I was determined to convince her that I was not the fickle, inconstant being that I had been described. It was not, however, very easy to succeed in this, but at length I did succeed. After having put me to a trial, from which I came with flying colors, she accepted my proposals, and agreed to try me still farther in—a union for life.

During the period of our betrothal, she said several times, quite captivously, "I am so glad to see that you also have faults; I feel now less humiliated, less unhappy from my own."

This pleased me very much, and all the more as I perceived that Maria, while she showed me my faults with kindness, did not at all fondle her own.

Our wedding-day was fixed; and I ordered a carriage for two persons. Company was invited, and Maria and I were married. Nothing can be more common place than all this, excepting perhaps it be, that my wife and I agreed to understand the ceremony in an earnest and real sense, and to live accordingly. The result has been that now, after having been married five and twenty years (we celebrate our silver nuptials to-morrow,) we love each other better, and are happier together than we were the first hour of our union. We have therefore come to the conclusion, that unhappiness in marriage does not proceed from the indissolubility of marriage, as some may say; but because the wedding-service is not realized in the marriage.

Do not speak to me of the felicity of the honeymoon. It is but the cooing of doves. No! we must walk together along thorny paths penetrate together the most hidden recesses of life, live together in pleasure and pain, in joy and in sorrow; must forgive and be forgiven; and afterwards love more. And as time goes on, something marvellous occurs; we become lovely to each other, although wrinkles furrow cheek and forehead and we become more youthful, though we add year to year. Then no longer have worldly troubles, misfortunes, and failings, and power to dim the sun of our happiness for it radiates from the eye and the heart of our friend; and when our earthly existence draws to a close, we feel indeed that our life and our love are eternal. And this supernatural feeling is quite natural after all, for the deeper and the more inwardly we penetrate into life, the more it opens in its depths of eternal beauty. Many happy husbands will testify to this.

But observe, husband or wife! To qualify as such a witness, you must have been, at some little pains to find—"the right one." Don't take the wrong one, inconsiderately.

The Story of Casper Hauser.

Our readers will remember some fifteen or twenty years since the mysterious tale of a strange youth found in Leipsic. The mystery was never explained. Like the man in the iron mask it excited endless speculation, but with no determined result. The recent death of the Grand Duke of Baden, with whose family the tale was associated, has revived public interest in it. The following are the facts so far as they are at present known:

In the year 1806, the Emperor Napoleon compelled the then Grand Duke of Baden, Duke Charles Frederick, to marry his son Duke Charles to Stephanie Tascher de la Pagerie, a niece of the Empress Josephine. The fruits of that marriage were two sons and three daughters. All of the latter are now living—one is married to the Marquis of Douglas. The first son died very suddenly, and then the second son disappeared or died very suddenly, no records of either are to be found.—Duke Ludwig, the younger brother of Duke Charles, was exiled from Court for a very considerable period by his father, the then reigning Grand Duke. A fate seemed to attend the male children brought into the world by Stephanie.

Suspicions of foul play were very general at the time, and were directed solely against Duke Ludwig, who was known to be ambitious of succeeding his father, and who hated the Dutchess Stephanie and her children. Duke Charles died, and on the death of his father, Duke Ludwig remained unmarried, leading a life of the wildest and most criminal character. Some years previous to his succession his father the Grand Duke Charles Frederick having lost his first wife, contracted a left-handed or morge-nastic marriage with Madame Geyrovor Gueyrsberg, a lady of bad reputation about the Court. After their marriage Madame Geyrovor was created Countess of Hochberg.

While married to the Grand Duke Charles Frederick the Countess Hochberg gave birth to four children, the eldest of whom was the Grand Duke Charles Leopold; whose demise is now recorded. Rumor was mysterious about the parentage of these children and dark hints were thrown out as to their relationship, Duke Ludwig's name being much complicated in these statements.—During the reign of this Ludwig it happened that a wild idiotic youth was found one morning sitting in the streets of Leipsic and unable to give any account of himself. His tongue gave forth only unintelligible and indistinct sounds. Taken care of and instructed by kind Samaritans, this youth, who had given to him the name of Caspar Hauser gradually made known to his friends that his previous existence had been passed in a cell underground, in which he had only seen one person; that he had never seen the daylight until a few days before his discovery in Leipsic, when his keeper carried him out of the cell, and transported him to the place in Leipsic where he was found.

Inquires, public and private, were made in all direction without any result. Suspicions of various kinds arose, a paper war ensued, some authors treating Caspar Hauser as an ingenious impostor, others enunciating boldly the suspicion that he was the heir to the Baden throne. Facts, however were wanting to prove the connection, and while the inquiries were still pending, poor Caspar Hauser was suddenly murdered in Nurnberg. The wanting facts have never been supplied, though the chain of circumstantial evidence has been increased and strengthened. It was known at the time of the paper war alluded to, that a pamphlet on the subject announced for publication, containing some of the wanting proofs, had been bought off some unknown person.

This unknown person was subsequently proved in a court of justice to have been Major Hennenhofer, the creature and confidant of Ludwig, the minister and participant in all his dissapations. Major Hennenhofer was also seen in Nurnberg on the evening when Caspar Hauser was murdered. Were an inquiry to be made, it is possible that more evidence on the subject would be forthcoming, and the identity of Caspar Hauser with the missing son of Dutchess Stephanie be clearly established. The duchess has preserved on this subject the strictest silence. Her present position and influence in Paris might, perhaps, if the suspicions which have prevailed are well founded, induce her to break that resolution, and visit with vengeance the family for whose advantage her own sons were made away with.

A dandy getting measured for a pair of boots, observed: "Make them cover the calf." "Heavens!" exclaimed the shoemaker astounded, surveying his customer, "I have not got leather enough."
