Murat, was the son ofen simple farmer, who kept a country inn at La Bastide, a stragling village in the south of France, fronting the Pyrenees; the inhabitants of whose valleys, strong, intelligent, and adventureous, possess almost the chivalrous genious of Spain, and recall even among the peasantry the plebeian nobleness and intrepedity of blood of Henry IV. There are in the south of France especial, as there are in Spain, in Scotland, and in the East, tribes of people among whom nobility is found in every rank; where even the mendicant feels the dignity of blood, because he was within tion. Thenceforward the two families were him the pride of soul. The young Joachim Murat belonging to one of those tribes .-As a child, and as a shephard, he was strengthened by the rural habits, and by the rough agricultural labors of his family ; serving by turns like his brothers, in the fields, or in his father's employ. He was passionately fond of horses, which, like those of Andaluand grooming with his childish hands, when occasion required it, those belonging to the Wooden or Iron axle-trees manufactured travellers, chance visitors in the stables of of a chevalier. His family, though rustic being in easy circumstances, procured him in the village, and in the small neighboring town of Cabors, the instruction that was suited to a child who was destined either for the priesthood, or one of the professions at that time accessible to young men of his condition. His lively and flexible intellect accompanied itself as readily to these mental exercises, as his body did to the labors of the field, or the dangers of the camp. His figure was tall and slim, and his neck easy and slender, his armes flexible, though strongly knit at the shoulders, his legs well shaped for the saddle, his feet well formed for clambering up the steep ascents of the mountains. His countenance was open and beaming, his eyes blue, his nose acquiline, his lips smiling, his color fresh, his hair chestnut, I ong and sifky, curling naturally, and waving over his cheeks, or flowing down his shoulders in the manner of the Basques, a't struck the eye and won the heart. nature on the outward appearance of this young man, which foretold something singular in his destiny. In the course of twelve months he passed through the ranks of corporal and troop quartermaster, and at the end of the year he was made a commissioned officer. The emigration having left the ranks free, and officers' commissions vacant in abundance, he became a captain in 1793, and in a few succeeding years he was elevated by one exploit after another, to the rank of Brigadier Jeneral. Napoleon, who distinguished him every were in the first Italian campaign, appointed him his aid-de-camp at Milan, and repaid in friendship all the admirations and devotion evinced for him by young Murat. He attached him to his fortunes, conducted him to Egypt, witnessed his cavalry charges against the Mamelukes, felt how the elecand recognising in him the buoyancy and and enslave the directory, and confide to him the part of audacity and armed intervention at St. Cloud on the 18th Brumaire. officer_was_in_love_with_one_of his_General?s sisters, Caroline Bonaparte. She was scarcely in the prime of youth, of a beauty less Brecian and classic, in the eyes of statuaries, than that which distinguished the Princess Pauline Borgese, but more gracefully attractive, of a more royal ambition. Murat trembled to ask her in marriage, in the apprebensions of a refusal, grounded upon his humble birth and want of fortune : but Bomaparte, counting his bravery for riches, and his own favor for blood, offered her to him., Morat, the most enamored, and the most happy of men, gave his heart to the sister and to the brother his gratitude and devo-mingled like their two destinies. In charging he never used a sabre, nor even a small sword: the only weapon he wore on horseback, was a Roman blade, broad and short, useless in attack or defense, against the long blades of the enemy's cavalry. This blade, with a hilt of mother of pearl, artistically inlaid with precious stones was ornamented with the portrait of the brautiful Queen Caroline, his wife, and of their four children; he never drew this weapon from the scabbard but once, in a moment of great danger, and then not to strike with, but to animate his escort to charge with him a cloud of cavalry by which was surrounded. He had said-to-the Count de Mosbourg, his friend and minister, who had admistered his finances with talent and whom he remembered with the disinterestedness and adoration of friendship: "My sweetest consolation, when I look backon my career as a soldier, a general, and a king, is that I never saw a man fall dead by my hand. It is not, of course, impossible that in so many charges, when I dashed my horse forward at the head of the squadrons, some pistol shots fired at random may have wounded or killed an enemy, but I have knowed nothing of the matter; if a man fell dead before me, and by my hand his image modern warrior, with the impetuousity of courage. He craves for victory in the mass but the details of carnage excite his horror and his pity. This passion for military splendor and honor, which exposed the life of Murat, to the blows of the enemy, was part of the charm by which he fed on his soldiers. His costume was a portion of his character, with which he courted popularity in the camp.—Splendor was for him the image of glory. A native of the south, he loved, like the Cid, Spanish pomp, showy steeds, arms of precious workmanship and the rich and highly colored dresses of the Arabs. His uniform was never anything but the dazzling caprice of his imagination; he generally were boots of red morocco, with large folds talling over the instep, ornamennot satisfy his fire and energy; and in 1787, ted with golden spurs; white pantaloons; fitting close, and displaying the manly beauty contrary to the wishes of his parents, in the 12th regiment of light dragoons. Europe being then at peace, he bore for five years without impatience or disgust, the life of a ed hat, like that of the attendants of Francis 1., adorned with two or three plumes of horse consoled him. The war of 1791 sum- feathers and an egret floating and sparkling in the air. A theatrical hero in appearance but readily pardoned for his warlike ostentation, because it was surpassed by his bravery, and at the scene of display was always in the midst of fire and carnage. Napoleon sometimes smiled with his lieutenants at this somewhat puerille display of his brother-in-law; but he was pleased even with this excess, because it contrasted so well with his simpicity-another species of charm with which he also struck the eyes of the soldiers.

"Sold" at Half Price.

A shop-keeper in a small town in Massachusetts one day marked some handkerchiefs in his widow with the tempting words
-"Selling at half price!"
