

Hayne and Bigamist and Swindler.

The New Orleans Delta contains a letter from Hagerstown, giving the following account of the rogue calling himself "Dr. B. J. Hayne," who is now in the Kentucky Penitentiary, for several crimes which we have heretofore noticed:

Hagerstown, Maryland, is the place of his nativity, and sundry jails and penitentiaries have contributed to his education. With a versatility of talent as universal as it is accomplished, the doctor can assume any name that strikes his fancy, and any profession that promises to further his ends. From the lowest depths of brutish crime, requiring nothing more than mere physical strength, to the most complicated and daring schemes of villainy, requiring for their successful execution, the coolest courage, the greatest self-possession, and the highest order of abilities—in all the regular graduation from these extremes, the doctor is equally at home, the baptismal name of the Doctor is Jesse Duncan Elliott Quantrill—a name familiar in the annals of crime. He was named after the distinguished naval hero of Lake Erie, who was a great friend of the family. Quantrill has rendered his own name as notorious for criminal pursuits, as his distinguished namesake was renowned in our naval history.

In 1846, Quantrill served out a term of six years in the Eastern Penitentiary of Pennsylvania, and returned to Hagerstown for a few days. He was sentenced for ten years, but as is generally the case with him, was pardoned out at the expiration of six years. Leaving Hagerstown, the next place we hear of him is in Columbia, Md., where he figured under the name of C. Mitchell. His object in visiting Cumberland, was to wreak his vengeance on a lady who had formerly been his wife, but whom his criminal course had completely alienated from him. This lady herself from one of the most respectable families in Hagerstown, he had persuaded to marry him when very young, and such was her love for, and confidence in him, that the most overwhelming and conclusive proof of guilt at his first conviction, some 15 or 18 years ago, could neither lessen the one, nor abate the other. She believed him innocent and it was not until after his second conviction that his true character disclosed itself to her. She then made application for and obtained a divorce from him, and sometime after married her present husband, who is of very high standing in society.

The tragical incident that led to the discovery of Quantrill, in Cumberland. He had as has been stated, gone there for the purpose of murdering his lady and was only prevented from doing so by the timely arrival of several persons connected with the house, whom her cries attracted. When discovered she was lying on the floor, with Quantrill over her, attempting to strangle her. A long knife was in his hand, and he was in the act of cutting her throat. For this he was convicted, and sentenced to the county jail to serve a term of five years, and to pay a fine of $500. He was only saved from the penitentiary by the State failing to prove premeditation of murder.

He remained in jail until last November, (only a little better than half of his sentence) when, by his fascinating manners, agreeable conversation, protestation of innocence of any design on the life of his former wife, and promises of future amendment, he so far gained on the feelings of the people of Cumberland, that with very few exceptions they united in an application to his Excellency the Governor of that State, for his pardon and the remission of his fine. Their application was successful. The Governor pardoned him, on condition of his leaving the State; and Quantrill was again at liberty. But he was without funds. These however, he speedily managed to obtain. Among the many visitors whom curiosity led to see him, was a young man from his native place. Captivated by his manners, and conceiving that Quantrill had been "more sinned against than sinning," it was no difficult matter for Quantrill to work upon the sympathies and impose on the frankness of youth. Freely admitting past improprieties of conduct, Quantrill declared that he had no desire to provoke further punishment by further misconduct; he had suffered enough and he was determined hereafter to be a reformed man; but he was without friends and money; and unless he obtained money to carry him off honestly, necessity would compel him to seek it dishonestly.

It was his wish to go where he was not known, and where his future conduct would not only draw suspicion, but enable him to secure respect and esteem. Seduced by his professions, anxious to rescue him from the life he had been leading, the young man not only gave him his purse, but pledged his credit, and Quantrill was then furnished the means for his departure. Before going however, he confided to the young man his intention of assuming the name of B. J. HAYNE, assigning as his reason that his own name was too widely known, and would prove a dead weight on him. Under his new name, your journal has given us some of your readers will recognize one of the most accomplished swindlers and boldest forgers of the day. The largest portion of his manhood has been spent in prison. He was confined in one of the prisons of Mississippi but made his escape, although surrounded by the guards. From thence he went to Cincinnati, bought up some steamboats, without a dollar, flogged one of the Judges of the Court at his own (the Judge's) house, entered into some great mercantile speculation returned from the Judge's house, and crossed over to Kentucky—all in the short space of one day.

After his first discharge from the State prison he went to Philadelphia, represented himself as a wealthy contractor, bought up what horses he could in the city on credit, and sent his agents through the State to buy more for sale. He stated that he was about to establish stage lines all over the State, that would break up the old lines. His boldness alarmed the stage companies, and they offered him $25,000 to go off.

The Flax Manufacture.

We yesterday examined specimens of Flax Wool, or the fiber of Flax (as likewise of Hemp) reduced by Clauson's process to a condition closely resembling that of ordinary Fleeced Wool. That from hemp is harder and coarser than the other; but either is fine enough for ordinary fabrics, and at least as strong as good Merino Wool. The Flax is nearly as white as sheep's wool, and may doubtless be made quite so. The cost of the Flax Wool is about fifteen cents per pound; though in the fertile West, where land is strong and cheap, it may doubtless be produced lower. This was made at the manufactory in Norwich, Conn., owned by the proprietors of Clauson's American patent.

A Linen Factory, expected to cost some $300,000, is now going up at Fall River, Massachusetts. Dr. D. S. Leavitt, of Kentucky, aided by some friends of the Flax culture, is putting up Linen Machinery of his own invention at Marcellus, N. Y. So far, it seems to promise well.

We noticed a large breadth of Flax growing in the lower part of Washington county, N. Y. It is rather short, but otherwise looks well. Flax is extensively grown in Ohio, and is beginning to be manufactured there. The seed pays cost in many countries, so that whatever may be obtained for the fiber will be profit. The culture is being extended.

The day is at hand when Flax will rival Cotton as the basis of cheap and serviceable fabrics, and greatly diminish the annual requirement of Wool. We believe Flax Cotton, equal to Sea Island, can be produced here for six cents per pound. If then, good Wool may be obtained from Flax at fifteen cents, there can be no doubt that an immense breadth must be sown annually—equal to that of Wheat at present. And its cultivation will go far to stop the ruinous drain of cash or other valuables from temperate to the semi-tropical climes to pay for raw Cotton. This will necessitate a more diversified industry at the South, and thus benefit all sections. Success to Flax-Cotton!

Georgia Union Convention.

The Constitutional Union Convention of Georgia, assembled at Charleston, on the 18th of July, after a session of two days, was unable to agree upon a platform and candidate, and finally split wider than ever. The Scott men withdrew. The friends of Messrs. Webster and Fillmore, numbering together about fifty, joined and nominated the Hon. Daniel Webster for President, and Charles G. Jenkins, of Georgia, for Vice President. The friends of Cobb, mostly from Cherokee, nominated what they call a Pierce and King ticket, being composed in part of the most ultra Whigs in Georgia. The Cobb men were much chop fallen.

Southern Rights Convention.

The Southern Rights Convention which assembled at Montgomery, Ala., have laid on the table two sets of resolutions, under consideration at the time of sending to you my last dispatch—one proposing a separate organization, and the other approving of the nomination of Franklin Pierce. The Convention appointed a committee to interrogate the present Presidential nominees in regard to their views of the Compromise measures, and resolved upon a secession from both of the old parties, provided that neither of the nominees return a satisfactory answer. In this event a new convention is to be called, to nominate a third candidate for the Presidency.

The Vote of Georgia.

A majority of all the votes cast at the Presidential election in Georgia is necessary to a choice. There will be three tickets in the field there, Democratic, Whig, and Union. If neither party gets a majority the election has to go to the General Assembly, where the Union men have a large majority.

Railroad Subscription.

The Grand Jury of Lawrence county, have recommended that the county should subscribe one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the stock of the Pittsburg and Erie Railroad Company, and the Commissioners have resolved to make the subscription.

Gold.

The produce of gold for 1852 is estimated at 242 tons, which, although twelve times the quantity produced at the commencement of the century, as respects bulk sinks into perfect insignificance; for, if cast in bars, a closet nine feet high, eight feet wide, and eight feet deep, would hold it all. 21,713 times the space would be required to hold all the iron smelted in Great Britain annually.
