He treated her Did Lord Primrose's attempted marriage so barbarously that she had even reason to take place exactly at the same time with fear that he would some day put an end to her visit to the conjuror? She asked her her life. One morning she was dressing brother on what day the circumstance which herself in her chamber, near an open window, when his lordship entered the room formed, she took out a key, and requested him behind her, with a drawn sword in his to go to her chamber, to open a drawer hand. Half dressed as she was she immediately, by a very laudable exertion of her natural good sense, went to the house of Lord Primrose's Fortunqualities of goods can be bought for in any, ately, she perceived him in time to leap our at once extended; and it being now thought vain to attempt a reconciliation, they never afterwards lived together. Lord Primrose soon afterwards went abroad During his absence, a foreign conjurer or fortune-teller. came to Edinburgh, professing among many other wonderful accomp ishments, to be able to inform any person of the present condition or situation of any other person, at whatever distance, in whom the applicant might be interested. Lady Primrose was excited by curiosity to go, with a female friend, to the lodgings of the wise man in the Canongate, for the purpose of inquiring regarding the notions of her husband, of whom she had not heard for a considerable time. It was at night, and the two ladies went, with the tartan screens or plaids of their servants drawn over their faces by way of disguise. Lady Primrose having described the individual in whose fate she was interested, and he was at present doing, the conjurer led her to a large mirror, in which she distinctly perceived the appearance of the inside of a church with a marriage-party arranged near the alter. To her astonishment, she recognised in the shadowy bridegroom no other than her husband. The magical scene was not exactly like a p.cure; or if so, it was rather like the live pictures of the stage than the dead and immovable delineations of the pencil. It admited of additions to the persons represented, and of a progress of action. As the lady gazed on it, the cereatonial of the marriage seemed to proceed. The necessary arrangements had at last been made; the priest seemed to have pronounced the preliminary service; he was just on the point of bidding the bride and bridegroom join hands, when suddenly a gentleman, for whom the rest seemed to have waited a considerable time and in whom Lady Primrose thought she recognised a brother of her own, then abroad, en tered the church and advanced hurriedly towards the party. The aspect of this person was at first only that of a friend who had been invited to attend the ceremony, and who had come too late; but as he advanced the expression of his countenance and figure was altered. He stopped short: his face assumed a wrathful expression; he > tirely away. When Lady Primrose reached home, she wrote a minute narrative of the whole transterious vision. This narrative she sealed up in the presence of a witness, and then deposited it in one of her drawers. Soon afterwards her brother returned from his travels, and came to visit ber. She asked if, in the course of his wanderings, he had happened to see or hear anything of Lord Primrose? The young man only answered by saying that he wished he might never again hear the name of that detested personage mentioned. Lady Primrose, however, questioned him so closely that he at last contessed having met his lordship, and that under very strange circumstances. Having spent some time in one of the Dutch cities-it was either Amsterdam or Rotterdam—he had become acquainted with a rich merchant, who had a very beautiful daughter, his on-ly child, and the heiress of his large fortune. One day, his friend, the merchant, informed him that his daughter was about to be married to a Schottish gentleman, who had lately come to reside there. The nup-1-3w tials were to take place in the course of a fisheries at l'anama; drew his sword and rushed up to the bridegroom, who prepared to defend himself .-

The whole scene then became tumultuous and indistinct, and soon after vanished en-few days; and as he was a countryman of the bridegroom, he was invited to the wedding. He went accordingly, was a little too late for the commencement of the ceremony From a lucid summary of the "Story of Lut, fortunately, came in time to prevent the Countess of Stair." grand-daughter of the the sacrifice of an amiable young lady to Chanceller Earl of Loudon, we extract the the greatest monster alive in human shape-

What we have Observed.

Much of the poverty entailed upon many families in the land; can, in a great measure be attributed to injudicious connubial engagements. Many young men and girls form mother, where she told her story, and de- matrimonial alliances, and assume the remanded protection. That protection was sponsibilities of having families, when they are no more prepared for them, than an unlettered savage is to practice law-no more capable of bringing up a family correctly. than he who never saw a ship or compass to successfully steer a vessel over the ocean. How many men have had their noses upon the "grindstone" for scores of years, by marrying before they could afford it, instead of waiting a few years until they have accumulated something to start with. How thougtlessly they assume the responsibilities and expenses of a family, which they are unprepared for? How many foolishly allow the disposition to spend an undue share of leisure time with the fair sex to grow upon them to the exclusion of more useful employments and study of the elements of success in business? How many a man who has married at an early age, when his circumstances did not required it might have, by four or five years labor, acquired a starting having expressed a desire to know what capital, the interest of which alone would prove almost a competency, at the age of fifty years. But, by at once burdening himself, all his carnings have been required for his support and he labors on through life without ever having the same opportunity, to secure property or a home he would have had in the few first years of his majority.

There can be no fixed time set for mar-ringe. As a general thing 25 years of age is enough for a male and 21 for a femalenotwithstanding Franklin's advocacy of early marriage. Then the physical system has attained maturity, the intellect strength, and the judgement discrimination. Those whose business interests would be promoted by earher marriage-and there are many suchcan with reason and advantage, contract marriage at an earlier age. Those who are not so circumstanced as to get along as well with a wife as without, "better defer it till a more convenient season." These are homely thoughts, which may sound strangly to the young lady or gentleman, who prefer long stories in newspapers on the subject of marriage, to common everyday remarks .-Every observer will see the importance of reference to this subject, by casting an eye over the face of society, and see the many instances of injudicious marriages. The girls are as much at fault as young men in the matter. Those who are thrown upon their toil is most miserably rewarded at best still, withal they would have means, if the inclination were present for self improvement and the ability to save comething out of their earnings. But how often is it that every cent is spent as fast as it is carned, for elegant dresses, trinkets, &c. Thus toiling for a few years without saving any of their carnings or even devoting any of it, or their leisure time to self improvement they learn to look forward to marriage as the means of escaping their drudgery. Under these circumstances, the offers or those just as wise as themselves are most likely to be received and the first of the worst kind are too often accepted. Then what a glories start in life. Neither are possessed of anything. They burden themselves with additional care and expense. If habits of economy and self improvement, are not acquired before marriage, how unlikely that prosperity and pecuniary comfort will be attained afterwards. A little start in the beginning goes on componding interest every year, by saving of rents, if a renter, or interest if a borrower, and by the time old age comes on alone is worth thousands to the possessor.
