He entered Dartmouth College in 1797, when in his 16th year, and graduated in 1801. Although but imperfectly prepared for the College course, he managed by extraordinary diligence, to overcome all difficulties, and to take high rank as a scholar. After his graduation, he commenced the study of the law in Salisbury, continued it in Fryburg, Maine, and concluded it in Boston in the office of Mr. Gore. During part of this time he supported himself by copying legal and other instruments of writing. He was admitted to practice in Boston in the year 1805. His first practice was in Boscawon near his birth-place, but in 1807 he removed to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, where he encountered all the difficulties apt to beset a young lawyer at the outset of his career .-A good practice however, soon rewarded his labors, and his talants became so conspicuous that in 1812 he was elected to the 13th Congress, when hardly thirty years of age.
