THE ONLY TRUE PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON
JUST PUBLISHED,
T. B. WELCH'S MAGNIFICENT PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON,
Engraved (by permission) from Stuart's only original portrait in the Athenaeum, Boston.
This superb picture, Engraved under the superintendence of THOMAS SULLY, Esq., the eminent and highly gifted artist, is the only correct likeness of Washington ever published. It has been characterized as the greatest work of art ever produced in this country. As to its fidelity, we refer to the letters of the adopted son of Washington, GEORGE WASHINGTON PARK CURTIS, who says, "it is a faithful representation of the celebrated original," and to Chief Justice Taney, of the Supreme Court of the United States, who says, "As a work of art its excellence and beauty must strike every one who sees it, and it is no less happy in its likeness to the Father of his country. It was my good fortune to have seen him in the days of my boyhood, and his whole appearance is yet strongly impressed on my memory. The portrait you have issued appears to me to be an exact likeness, representing perfectly the expression as well as the form and features of the face." And says SENATOR CASS, it is a life-like representation of the great original. PRESIDENT FILLMORE says, "the work appears to me to have been admirably executed and eminently worthy of the patronage of the public." Says MARSHALL the eminent portrait painter, and the pupil of Stuart, "your print is more remarkable than any other I have seen, for presenting the whole individuality of the original portrait, together with the noble and dignified repose of air and manner, which all who ever saw him considered a marked characteristic of the illustrious man it commemorates."
For the great merits of this picture we would refer every lover of Washington to the portrait itself, to be seen at the office of his paper, and to the letters of the following Artists, Statesmen, Jurists and Scholars accompanying it.
ARTISTS.—Marchant and Elliot, of New York; Nagel, Rothermel, and Lambert, of Philadelphia; Chester Harding, of Boston; Charles Frazier, of Charleston, S. C.; and to the adopted son of Washington, Hon. Geo. W. P. Curtis, himself an artist STATESMEN, His Excellency Richard Gilmore, Major Gen. Winfield Scott, Hon. George M. Dallas, Hon. William R. King, Hon. Daniel Webster, Hon. Lincoln Boyd, Hon. Lewis Cass, Hon. Wm. A. Graham, Hon. John P. Kennedy, Hon. R. C. Winthrop, LL. D. JURISTS—Hon. Roger B. Taney, Hon. John Duer, Hon. John McLean, Hon. Rufus Choate, SCHOLARS—Charles Folsom, Esq., the well known Librarian of the Boston Athenaeum, who says, "I would rather own it than any painted copy I have ever seen." E. P. Whipple, Richard Hildreth, Hon. Edw. Everett, LL. D., Jared Sparks, LL. D., William H. Prescott, LL. D., Washington Irving, Ralph W. Emerson, Esq., Prof. T. C. Upham, J. H. Hensley, Fuz Green Halleck, H. W. Longfellow, Wm. Gilmore Simms; and From Europe, Lord Talford, T. B. Macaulay, Sir Archibald Alison, Lord Mayor of London, &c. A Country Wedding.
"Did I ever tell you of a certain wedding I once attend'd? Its history runs in this wise. On one stormy Thursday, last winter, as I was going to the post office, I was accosted by a young man, or old boy. (I don't know which, but shall leave you to judge,) with the inquiry—
"I say, mister, can't ye tell me, sir, where Dominie Soule lives?"
"I suppose I am the man you are seeking." The young man's countenance changed. The expression of intense anxiety passed away, and was succeeded by one of ludicrous bashfulness.
"Well, then, you're Dominie Soule, be ye?—Well, I want to see you a few minutes, if you've no objections."
"None at all, sir. Be so kind as to walk into my study with me, where we can attend to your business by the side of a comfortable fire."
Once in the study, he asked again, "You're Dominie Soule, the minister, be ye?"
"I am."
"Be ye alone?" said he looking sheepishly at the half open bed-room door.
"We are," said I, as I closed it. I knew well enough what he wanted, but was wick-ed enough to enjoy his embarrassment.—After hitching and shuffling, and hemming awhile, he spoke out—
"Well, I come for to get you to go and marry somebody to night."
"Indeed, and how far is it?"
"O, it's only just seven miles up here, you know."
I wanted he should get one else: it storm'd furiously, and I did not feel like buffeting a cold north-wester that night. But he said "No; the folks want you, and the gal wants you, and so do I want you, and the old folks wouldn't like if we didn't have you know."
"Well, if you must have me, I wish you would postpone it till better weather I will then come and marry you."
"Oh, dear that won't do, no how for we've postponed it once, and we wouldn't postpone it again for nothing."
"Suppose you bring her down here?"
"No, that wouldn't do neither; cause the old folks wants to see us get married, and you must come any way; you sha'n't lose nothin'."
The poor fellow begged so hard, I concluded to go, and accordingly hired a horse and cutter and about five o'clock started on my novel wedding mission. I found the travelling exceedingly bad all the way and particularly so after I left the main road. At length I reached the log house in which the fair bride lived. Hitching my horse, I went to the door and knocked, when a stern voice bade me come in. Entering the house I was invited to sit down with all my overclothes on. I asked the old man if they were going to have a wedding there that evening. He said they were. I then looked round to see, if I could, where the parties were coming from. There was but one door to the house, and that led out into the world. Very soon, however, I heard a clattering up stairs, and to my astonishment, the bridegroom and bride came down the ladder. He backed down leading her by both hands. They were seated.
"If you are ready for the ceremony, you will please rise."
They started at each other, at the old folks, at me, but sat still. Twice I repeated it and twice was met by the same vacant stare.
"If you want to get married, stand up," said I. "That they understood, and I proceeded to make the twain one. When I came to this part of the ceremony, the matter ran thus:
"Do you take this woman?" &c.
"Most solemnly, sir."
"Do you promise to love her above all others?" &c.
"Why, sir, he said, "I've done so this long while."
I almost forgot the solemnity of the occasion in my efforts to suppress laughter.—When I came to the bride with this question, "Do you take this man?" &c.
He's took me, ha'm't he, for to be his wife's my husband, then without my takin' him."
"Do you promise to love him above all others?"
"I'll love him jist as long as he loves me, and that's long enough."
I smiled, but succeeded in governing myself so as to conclude the ceremony, which throughout, was of the same unique character. When it was over the bridegroom passed around a bowl of good old strap, and then gave a cigar. Just as I was leaving he gave me some change, which I put in a separate pocket, to know just how much I had. When I got home, I paid ten shillings for my horse and cutter and on counting my change, found that he had given me the sum of six and sixpence. But, as he had said, I didn't "lose nothin'." The other three and sixpence I had in fun.

J. W. GRUBB.

The Bankrupt Merchant.
Raymond Wellford was considered, although a very young man, one of our most flourishing merchants. He was a welcomed guest in the so called highest circle of fashion, while many a calculating mamma regarded him as a very desirable son-in-law in perspective. Suddenly he was overwhelmed by pecuniary losses and embarrassments while the news spread so fast as gossip tongues could report it. Strange to say although his elegant mansion had to be sacrificed, there was not a debt which remained unpaid—while he had money. Wise men, in the review of his conduct, were heard to say that he was exceedingly honest, or an immoderate fool.
"What think you of human nature, my friend?"
"It is a philosophical enigma," I replied.
"So it was with me until I solved it," said he. I found it a stange compound, the largest portion of which was selfishness.—For instance—when the guiding of wealth covered my name, I was sought after by the very men who now turn their backs upon me. I was flattered by the woman who, if my name was now mentioned in their presence, would affect a forgetfulness of having heard it.—After dinner we'll make some calls, during which you will perceive ample illustration of what I have said."
Accordingly after dinner we set out.—We first entered the counting-room of a merchant to whom he introduced me as a friend. I soon learned that my friend was not held in the highest estimation, from the cold formality with which he was received; we did not even have the courtesy of chairs offered us.—With a meaning smile, Raymond bade the merchant a good afternoon, and we soon found ourselves in the street.
"This is illustration number one," Raymond said, laughing.
"Is it possible that you could ever have been intimately acquainted with this man?" I asked.
"That man has been reduced to the extremity of being obliged to beg his dinners. Time after time have I thus accommodated him. I even loaned him money to commence business, and you see how graciously he has sustained me and my friend."
We next paused at the door of an elegant mansion wherein Raymond had been a frequent and honored guest. It was the residence of a professional gentleman of large fortune, who still did Raymond the justice to regard him on all occasions as his friend, and to treat him as such. His lady had professed even greater friendship for him than her husband, if not for her own sake—so Raymond's misfortune had been whispered to the world, she no longer spoke to him as a dear, but endeavored to persuade her husband "to rid the house of him," which provoked the calm reply.
"He is a gentleman, and as such it is my will that you should entertain him whenever he may honor your house with his presence."
On this account I suppose we were tolerated in the present instance, for the gentleman was not at home. The lady received us rather coolly, which I was prepared to expect. After we were seated Raymond inquired for Miss Richards, the daughter, to which the lady replied with an apparent shrug of the shoulders, that she was well, but at present engaged.
"No, mamma, I am not," said the beautiful girl, as she lightly entered the room.—"I am happy to meet an old friend, who, I am sure is not the less welcome by being unfortunate."
"The lovers—for really they were—had not met since Raymond's misfortune, and their meeting was now so heartful that I could not for a moment doubt the affection of either. I saw also the cloud which rested upon the brow of Mrs. Richards, nor was I surprised to hear her say:—
"My daughter is so pleasantly engaged, gentlemen, that I trust my presence is no longer required," and without ceremony she left the room.
"Clara" said Raymond, taking her white hand "are all my fondest hopes to the realized? Can the daughter of a wealthy gentleman condescend to acknowledge her affection for a poor bankrupt merchant?"
"The fair girl blushed and looked doubtfully at me.
"Do not fear to speak in his presence," said Raymond, "for Pennville, next to yourself, is perhaps my best friend."
"Then listen-d," she said, smiling sweetly, "a few weeks since by the consent of my parents, I solemnly plighted my love to one who has long possessed my heart's best affections, did not ask the weight of his money bags, nor the depths of his coffers—for, those were matters which did not form one item of consideration with me. I found him a gentleman, and as such I gave him my hand. Until I am convinced I am mistaken, why should I desire to retract my words?"
"Clara, you are an angel," said Raymond covering her hand with kisses, and this treasure I value more than my existence for in adversity, as well as prosperity, it is still true to me."

REASONABLE PHILOSOPHY.—A shrewd Scotchman, who lived a bachelor's life was once asked why he did not marry. "Because I don't like old women," was his reply. "Why not marry a girl, then?" "Because they don't like old men!"
