Poetical Department. LAST SONG.

(From the Buffalo Rough Note.)
The beetle from the furrow goes,
The bird is on the sheltering limb,
And in the twilight's pallid close,
Sits the gray evening hushed and dim.
In the blue west the sun is down,
And soft the gossamer washes o'er
Green lines and hyacinths-so-brown,
As never fountains washed before.
I scarce can hear the curfew call,
I scarce can feel the night-wind fall,
I only see the shadows fall,
I only feel this chill is death.
At morn the bird will leave the bough,
The beetle o'er the furrow run
But with the darkness-falling now,
The morning for my eyes is done.
Piping his duty low and soft,
If shepherd chance to cross the wold,
Bound homeward from the flowery croft,
And the white tendance of his fold.
And find me lying fast asleep,
Be inspiration round him thrown,
That he may dig down very deep,
Where never any sunshine shone.
My life has been unbroken gloom,
No friend my dying hour will see,
Oh, wherefore should he ask for room
In consecrated rounds for me?

Miscellaneous Selections. Romance in Real Life.

The following facts possess some striking points of interest. We may premise that the story is strictly true, names only for obvious reasons, being suppressed.
In the year 1827, a young woman of decent parentage, engaged in the services of a clergyman in the west country, became acquainted with and formed an attachment to a young man in the neighborhood. A child the result of the attachment was ultimately, from the inability of either of the parents to support it, consigned to the care of the grandmother on the father's side. The mother had frequent opportunities of seeing and hearing of her boy, while she remained in that part of the country, but some time afterwards she left the neighborhood and removed to a distance. Afterwards the father left the same district also, and removed to Ireland, taking the boy with him. Some years passed away, and being mutually ignorant of each other's place or residence, the mother after using means to discover whether her child had been removed, gave up all hope of obtaining the much desired intelligence. She conducted herself well in the gentleman's family in which she served and in a few years after an offer of marriage was made her by a respectable tradesman, which after candid relating to him the circumstance of her previous life he was, by reason of attachment to her, induced to repeat, and she gratefully accepted the offer. In the prosecution of his business he soon after removed to Glasgow, where he commenced business as an engineer. The father of the boy in the meantime, had also married and by him the youth, when he grew up, was sent to and completed his apprenticeship with an engineer, in Ireland. Subsequently the lad went to Glasgow in search of, and obtained employment, by a singular coincidence, and without a knowledge on either side of the relationship of the engineer who had married the boy's mother; and from the fact of her not having seen him since he was an infant, she never suspected, and indeed could not possibly have recognized him as her long lost boy.
It appears that a brother of the lad's father happened to keep a booking office for parcels, &c., in the city, and to him, among others the father had sometimes, in his letters alluded to the mother of his boy, and his natural curiosity to know what had become her. The young man was occasionally in the habit of calling on his father's brother, and reading or talking over any mutual letters they might receive from his father in Ireland. It chanced one day that a well dressed and even ladylike woman entered the office to book a parcel; the man fixed his eyes upon her, and said he had some distant recollection of having seen her before and begged with all civility to inquire whether, in her youth, she had been in employment as a servant at a mansion in the west country which he named. The lady replied that she had; and, ever anxious regarding her boy, and having no reason for concealment, eagerly inquired if he could give her any tidings of her son, or if he knew anything concerning him? The man told her that he was himself the brother of the boy's father; that having seen her in former years he remembered and recognized her countenance and if she could call at his office the succeeding evening at 7 o'clock, he would make arrangements whereby her son should be in attendance, and she might see him.
The interest and anxiety it may be imagined, of the woman were great. She had not heard of her son, after many vain endeavors, for the long space of twenty years

A New Agricultural Machine.

The Albany Argus describes an invention which is designed to supersede the plow, the harrow, the roller and the man who sows the seed. It says:
"Yesterday we were shown the model of a new, and what purports to be, a valuable improvement in one of the laborious departments of the agriculturist, and for which the inventor procured a patent in April, of the present year. It embodies in one implement the capacity for plowing with four plows, scattering the seed in the furrows, harrowing and rolling. The plows are arranged at suitable distances in front of the cart and the number can be diminished at pleasure or four used. Immediately following, and attached to the plows, are the buckets for reception of the seed—corn included—and from which it is distributed. The harrows follow, behind the wheels of the cart and the rollers bring up the rear. On the platform of the cart, and forming a part of it is a basin of the same width which is the receptacle of the seed. Its position is immediately over the buckets, and as the cart goes forward it is so arranged as to allow the seed to fall, in suitable quantities, in the buckets below. The platform is enough for the driver, and will also accommodate several bags of grain. The harrows are also the width of the cart, in two pieces, as are also the rollers for more easy passage over the ground. The entire arrangement can be removed with ease, and the cart used in other capacity about the farm.
The inventor is Mr. Henry Beebe, a young mechanic of this city. While it appears to be a valuable improvement, and has received the approbation of many distinguished agriculturists, its utility remains to be tested. There is scarcely a doubt, however, that on prairie land it will prove a valuable acquisition to the implements of the farmer.
Like flares of snow that fall unperceived upon the earth, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one another,
