LOOK HERE!
Clocks, Watches & Jewelry.

Come All and Judge for Yourself!

During the past summer the undersigned—directly opposite the German Reformed Church in Allentown—has materially enlarged and beautifully finished, his Store room, and in order to make his assortment of

compare with his other improvements, he adopts this method to inform his old customers and a host of new he expects to get, that he has just returned from New York, with a most magnificent display of

House, Office and Parlor Clocks, Gold and Silver Watches, of every variety, Gold Ear and Finger Rings, Breast Pins, of every imaginable pattern, gold, silver, steel and brass Watch Chains, Seals and Keys, silver Tea and Table Spoons, gold, silver and steel Spectacles, for all ages, Spy-glasses of all sizes, gold Lockets & Chains, Music Boxes of various qualities, gold and fancy Medals, of all sizes, gold and silver Pencils, Melodians of the best manufactory in the United States.

In short every article kept in a well stocked Jewelry store can be got of him, and is determined to sell as cheap as can be bought either in New York or Philadelphia. He flatters himself to believe that in beauty and assortment his establishment cannot be surpassed in any country town in the state. The public is invited to call and then to judge for themselves.

He continues to repair Watches and Clocks, and since he keeps none but the very best of workmen, he can afford to warrant them for one year. Gold and Silver-ware will also be repaired at the shortest notice and upon the most reasonable terms.

Thankful for past favors he trusts that by punctual attendance and low prices he will be further able to meet with favors.

My First "Love Affair."
At about seventeen years of age, (on Wednesday afternoon) I attended a school where the mystery of the 'light fantastic toe' was taught.

The school was large, and the scholars were the daughters and sons of the merchants of one of our most populous seaports.

There were some exceedingly pretty girls among them; and the town was noted for the beauty of its females. There was one rosy-cheeked miss, rather older than myself, whose dancing was particularly spirited and graceful. She was not tall, but finely formed, and her eyes were of great beauty and brilliancy. Her temper was very lively, and her conversation polished and humorous. All these qualities were very attractive to a lad who seemed to live only for 'fun' and enjoyment. Whenever an opportunity offered, I selected her for my partner in the dance. She seemed 'nothing loth,' and we were most happy. But I could not talk to her, for my bashfulness was extreme. I would have given one of my arms to have been able to say to her the tender things which crowded upon my heart.

But I found it in vain; and was forced to content myself with only looking 'unutterable emotions.'

Some months passed in this blissful intercourse. She treated me as if I was a 'promising boy,' who might grow to something. In this she did not show much judgment; for although young in years, I believe I was as capable of an exalted and soul-subduing passion as at any subsequent period of my life. And I proved it, by wasting away and losing all my hilarity of spirits in the sober meditations of a first attachment.

There was during the winter 'a party' of young people of both sexes at my uncle's. The young dancer (into my affections) was one of the invited. I met her there, for the first time, where our intercourse could be unrestrained.

I succeeded, after divers efforts which sent the perspiration in streams to my forehead, in seating myself at her side; and after stammering attempts, at last subsided into an interesting conversation.

The evening passed off delightfully, and the party rose to go home. Then watching my opportunity, I asked leave to attend my fair one to her dwelling.

She smilingly consented. We walked slowly along the quiet streets of the town, apart from the rest of the party, and now and then putting and answering some question of trivial interest.

The walk, although near a mile, seemed not more than a few steps. Her stately edifice appeared in view. I walked still slower. We reached the steps of the front door. 'There was a light on the kitchen-hearth, which announced that all the family had retired for the night.'

She ascended the door-step, and stopped. The bright moon shone full upon her radiant face as she raised her blue eyes to that patroness of lovers.

I seized her hand. She made no effort to take it away. I looked up into her face, and she looked down at me, and, (I can't say how it is done) our lips came together, warm, blushing, trembling with emotion. I took—I believe—only one kiss; but that was sufficient for that ecstatic moment.

The spring within the door, saying, 'Good night!' in tones which sounded to my ear like the softest and sweetest breathings of an Aeolian-harp; and the door closed upon her charms.

That was the first 'love-kiss, I ever gave and received!

I walked slowly towards my own home, I believe, on the tips of my toes. I stopped after a few steps, to get breath. I looked up at the unclouded moon, and she seemed to smile on me with a look as if she was saying—

'I saw you, you rogue!'

And then, leaning on the bars of a rail-fence, near a green pasture, I murmured,— 'How delicious that was!' Was ever rose-leaf softer and sweeter than her lips! Did ever flute sound such gentle notes, as the sounds that fell from her tongue. That 'good night!' Ah! if an angle had leaped from your cloud,—which looks as if it was the chariot of the moon,—he could not have whispered 'peace' in more ravishing strains than that 'good night.' Ah, Jack! you're a lucky fellow! Millions of blessings descend and rest upon her 'home!'

Thus soliloquising, I reached my father's dwelling. I entered the kitchen door, softly and slyly. All the lights were extinct. I locked the door, and crept toward the parlor. 'How nice,' thought I, 'that all had gone to bed. Not one soul up, to break in upon the heaven of my feelings!'

I opened, very softly, the parlor door.— 'Thunder and earthquakes!—there sat my father! He was dosing in his arm-chair, but my entranced roused him.

'This is pretty doings, Jack, for a boy! What upon earth have you been doing!— Tell me, sir, where you have been so late!— Only waiting upon the ladies home from the party sit!'

Secret of Matrimonial Happiness.
Zschokke, in one of his tales, gives the following advice to a bride:—"In thy first solitary hour, after the ceremony, take the bridegroom and demand solemn 'ow of him should give him a vow in return. Promise one another sacredly, never, not even in jest, to wrangle with each other; never to bandy words or indulge in the least ill-humor.— Never, I say, never! I wrangling in jest, and putting an air of ill-humor merely to tease; becomes earnest by practice. Mark that! Next, promise each other, sincerely and solemnly, never to have a secret from each other, under whatever pretext, with whatever cause it might be. You must continually, and every moment, see clearly into each other's bosom. Even when one of you has committed a fault, wait not an instant, but confess it freely—let it cost tears, but confess it. And as you keep nothing secret from each other, so on the contrary, preserve the privacies of your house, marriage state and heart, from father, mother, sister, brother, aunt and all the world. You two, with God's help, build your own quiet world; every third or fourth one whom you draw into it with you, will form a party, and stand between you two. That should never be. Promise this to each other. Renew the vow at each temptation. You will find your account in it. Your souls will grow as it were together, and at last will become as one. Ah, if many a young pair had on their wedding day know this secret, how many marriages were happier than, alas, they are!"

A Prison Scene in Munich.
The number of female prisoners is very small in comparison with the men. At one particular wash tub stood four women.— Our conductor spoke to one of them, this being a sign to us to notice them. Two looked up, and their countenance fairly beamed with smiles; one, a tall and very handsome young girl, continued to wash away with downcast eyes. I felt a sort of delicacy in straining at her, her looks were so modest. A fourth, a fat, ill-looking old woman, also never looked at visitors. The two who smiled had remarkably agreeable faces; one with good features, and a very mild expression; the other, a small woman, and though with blooms on her cheeks, a certain and anxious expression about her eyes and mouth. Of which of these four women were we to here a fearful story related? The only one who looked evil, was the fat old woman.— As soon as we were in the court, our conductor said,

"That tall young girl," replied our guide, "was one, who a year or two ago, murdered her fellow-servant, and cutting up the body, buried it in the garden." The little woman next to her, some two years since, murdered her husband—and the handsome, kind, motherly-looking woman, who stood next destroyed her child of seven years old—the fat woman is only in for a slight offence."

So much for our judgement of physiognomy.—Household Words.

Showing the Dead.
There is a curious custom at Havana of laying out bodies in state during the night before burial. They are placed close to the open window, fronting the street, on a couch raised four or five feet from the ground. The corpse is surrounded with high wax tapers, and the whole room illuminated. Frequently when returning from a tortilla or a ball, I have been startled by seeing the affixed and rigid features of some old lady or gentlemen, dressed in their best attire, and apparently reclining before the window. It used to appear to me an unnecessary mockery of dressing out a corpse in a new suit of death, clothes, with tight patent leather boots and white neckcloth.

I remember one night in particular, I was returning home through one of the by-streets when seeing the lower windows of a house illuminated, and concluding there was a body lying in state, I went towards it. There close to the window, so close, that I could have touched it through the bars, lay the body of a young girl about fifteen years of age. She was in a ball dress, with flowers in her hair, and white satin shoes on her feet; her hands were crossed on her breast, her eyes closed; and her mouth slightly opened, and altogether her face and expression the most beautiful I had ever seen.— (Sullivan's Rambles.
