Sanders' School Books.

The subscribers who are largely engaged in the publication of School and other Books, have lately made arrangements for the Publication of one of the best Series of School Books,—being seven in number,—ever pub-for the gradual progression of the pupil in the ordinary branches of popular education.

The illustrations are admirably adapted and cannot fail to fix the mind upon sound moral principles which is ever the foundation of a good education.

On the whole they believe Sanders' series of School Books by far the most complete, respectfully recommend them for adoption

Poetical Department.

Be Off With You Now.

Be off with you now—don't I know That it's only enjoying you are;
With "checks like the rose's soft glow, And glances more bright than the star!"
'Tis true that my waist is but small,
And my ringlets may curl like the vine;
But I'm not like an angel at all!
Nor am I the least bit divine!

So be off with you now—don't I see Your deluding from eve until dawn?
My step may be bounding and free, But I am not in the least like a fawn!
But 'twas ever the method, we know, Since Adam in Eden began—The bosoms were sure to be snow, And necks of course like the swan!

Come be off with you now, until you learn To woo like a plain hearted youth; Let your mind, if you love me discern,
To win, you must woo me with truth!
I would rather—instead of these flowers, In which you are ever so rife—
That you promised to love me all hours, As long as each other had life!

I Wait For Thee.

The heart is swept—the fire is bright,
The kettle sings for tea;
The cloth is spread—the lamps are light,
The hot cakes smoke in napkins white,
And now I wait for thee.

Come come, love, home, thy task is done;
The clock ticks listlessly, The blinds are shut—the curtain down,
The warm chair to the fireside drawn,
The boy is on my knee.

Come home, love, home, his deeply fond eye Looks round him wistfully, And when the whispering winds go by,
As if thy welcome step was nigh, He grows exultingly.

In vain—he finds the welcome vain,
And turns his glance on mine, So earnestly, that yet again His form unto my heart I strain, That glance is so like thine.

Thy task is done, we miss thee here.
Where'er thy footsteps roam, No heart will spread such kindly cheer, No beating heart, no listening ear, Like those who wait thee home.

Ah, long the crisp walk fast
The well known step doth come;
The bolt is drawn, the gate is past,
The babe is wild with joy at last,
A thousand welcomes home.

Game of Brag.

"Talk about your darned fast lines," said a Yankee to a cockney, who was so impudent, in the natural way of his countrymen to commence bragging on English railroads, while the couple were progressing at the rate of forty miles an hour, on the Birmingham railway. "Why, mister, this road is purty considerable for England, but it won't do for 'Meriky. We ride estraddle of telegraphs there, when we are in a hurry, but when we ain't we take the railroad. I was coming from Philadelphia to New York, when I sez to a feller settin by me, 'who on earth owns that big garden with white pal-ins around it?'"

"I don't see no white palins," sez he.
"I don't see nothing else," sez I, "and a mighty tall fence it is too."

"The feller burst out a laffin—'why, you darned fool,' sez he, 'them's the telegraph poles.' And sure enough, when the engine feller stopped, I saw them poles one hundred feet apart, and we had been goin so all-fired fast, they looked like white palins."

At this moment the bell rang at a signal station, before the cockney had fully recovered from Jonathan's last dose.

"What's that bell ringing for?" inquired the Yankee of his English friend.

"We are approaching D—" "Well, them kind of bell fixings does for these ere slow cars, but we can't use them ere contrivances in 'Meriky."

"Ah; why not?"
"Travel too fast—'atch, bent round all to smash. We would be snatched through a village before the sound of a first clapper was in the neighborhood."

"My heyes! is it possible?" exclaimed the astonished cockney.

"Patch again, by thunder! Why, I was in the York cars when the steam whistles were first tried. May be you have heern of the terrible accident?"

"No."
"Well, sir, we were going it strong.
Hurricanes were no whar—all natur seemed shakin to pieces, when several miles of something was scene on the track. The whistle was let loose, and she did scream awfully, but it was no manner of use, for after tumbling over a span of smart horses, and a market wagon, I was just rising from Miscellaneous Selections.

A pond whom along came the whistle holler mixed up with some big cusses, I mind to have heard the engine man rip out when he first saw the wagon. But the poor fellow was dead when the voice arrived. Fact got the documents."

"Extraordinary," exclaimed the horstricken cockney, "and do they use whistles yet?"

"Bless your soul, no. Congress stoped 'em right off, and now we act on the philosophic principles, that light travels an all-fired sight faster than sound, which will do perhaps for this generation. We now tell 'em we are comin by bustin out a light that astonishes all animal creation, and I reckon rather surprised the planetary system at first. When it was tried at night the roosters along the road commenced crowing, and the chickens all got down from their roosts, thinking it was daylight."

The cars suddenly stopped, when Jonathan having arrived at the point of his destination, looked around at the astonished cockney, nobbed his head, and taking his carpet bag under one arm and his umbrella under the other, took his leave as sober as a deacon.

The Man Retired from Business.

Almost every man sets out in life with the determination, when a certain sum has been accumulated, to retire from the cares of business, and enjoy the balance of his days comfortably. Visions of sunny farms and rural retreats are ever before him; but, unfortunately, few men have the courage, when the required sum has been obtained, to be contented and retire. In the course of years, new tastes have been acquired, and new wants added to the humble catalogue with which he commenced life. The rural retreat has become a suburban residence, with coach houses, stables, &c., and a few thousands more have become necessary.— So, he goes toiling on, his ambition widening and extending as he pushes and urges his way on to competence and fortune.— During all this time he forgets that he is growing older—that his capacity for enjoyment is getting more contracted every day—that his tastes and habits are becoming confirmed in business life, so that when he does muster up the firmness to yield his place in the business world to younger men, he is about as unhappy a mortal as one could meet on a summer's day.

It is related of a tall chandler of London, who had accumulated a fortune and retired to his villa, that time hung so heavy upon his hands that he used to have a meeting day once a week, and make his own candles, for amusement. He had probably neglected through his life to lay in a store of knowledge, to cultivate a taste for reading, or otherwise prepare his mind as well as his pocket, for the purposes of a life of leisure.
His great object had been to make enough to retire on, without caring to provide something to retire with.

That man alone can hope to enjoy a pleasant leisure in the evening of his days, who has intellectual means of enjoyment always at command. He must, or should, be satisfied with comfortable independence and leave the cares of business in the meridian of life—if he can—before he becomes so thoroughly habituated to a certain routine, to deviate from which, or to leave, instead of comfort or happiness, would only make him miserable and discontented.—New Orleans Delta.

How to Choose a "BETTY."

Housekeeping is not so full of sunshine and rose-colored bliss as many imagine. It is hardly possible to get along without pot-wallopers and chamber-maids, and what with their waste, wages, vittals, and sass—says Aunt Sally—there are plaguy drawbacks on domestic peace and comfort. Old Pepper-grass was the "customer" for discriminating between the useful and the careless. Peppergrass sent word to the intelligence office that he wanted a good girl for general housework. About the time he expected an applicant he laid a broom down in the yard near the gate. Presently a girl comes to the gate, opens it, and strolls up to the house; the broom being immediately in the path, Miss Betsey strides over it, the old man was on the watch, and the first salute the girl got was:

"I don't want you!"
The girl sloped, and suddenly another bullet-headed Nancy appears; seeing the old broom in the way, she gives it a kick, and vaddles up to the house.

"You won't suit me, that's certain, Miss Mopsy!" bawls Peppergrass.
She disappeared in a hurry, and finally a third appears, opened the gate, and coming into the yard, she carefully closes the gate behind her, and walks up—the broom is still in the path, she picks it up and carries it along to the house, where she deposits it alongside the wood-shed. Before the girl could explain her business there, Peppergrass bawls out—

"Yes, yes, come in, you'll suit me!"
And she did, for that girl lived with Peppergrass seven years, and only quit living with him to go to housekeeping on her own book and a capital wife she made. Peppergrass was right.—Yankee Blade.
