The Common School System.

The annual Report of the Superintendent of Common Schools, furnishes us with a very interesting statement of the condition of this popular branch of our educational system. The following table exhibits the present condition of the Schools in Lehigh county, contrasted with 1844, before the law was made imperative : 1853

Whole number of Districts, Whole number of Schools, Number vet required, Average No. of months taught, Number of Male Teachers, Do. Female do. Average salaries of male teachers, Average salaries of femalo teachers.

cies, $$15,901. The Superintendent, while adverting in terms of commendation to the many excellent features of the existing system, says that it is by no means perfect, and suggests various improvements. Among these the following may be specified :---

I. The employment of a superior class of teachers.

2. The increase of the solaries of the teachers. 3. The better location of the School Hou-Ses. 4. A more enlightened mode of construction. 5. An improvement in the discipline of the Schools.

6. The abolition of Sub-Districts.

7. The appointment of a Superintendent in each county.

8. The establishment of more Normal Schools. And upon this latter point, the Superin

dendent says :----"It is hoped and believed that the Com monwealth, at no distant day, will be in a position to render increased aid and encouragement to the Common School system; and in no way could her means intended for this purpose be more judiciously applied than in the establishment of Normal Schools at different points of the State for the education of teachers. What teachers want, and what the system wants of them, is a distinct and independent professional position, identified with the occupation of teaching both by interest and inclination. This position can only be attained by proper professional training and adequate compensation."

A Runaway Girl in Male Attire.

About three weeks ago, a girl 14 years of nge, named Eliza Ann Peacock, or Smithers. as she occasionally called herself, suddenly disappeared from the home of a family who had adopted her, living in Philadelphia, and for some time their efforts to ascertain whither she had gone were fruitless. Recently, however, she was traced to New York City, and advertisements were inserted in several of the papers, announcing her sudden disappearance, and offering a reward of $25 for her apprehension. From information recently received at the Chiel's office. Officer Worley, on Wednesday, succeeded in discovering and arresting the truant. She avas found in the hostery store of Richard-Venables, No. 132 Canal street, dressed in male attire, and doing a clerk's duty behind the counter, at a salary of $2,50 per week. Her dress was neat, and she looked like a smart, active boy, and Mr. V. felt well satisfied with the manner in which she waited apon his customers. Her hair was clipped short, and her whole appearance so completely disguised her sex that no one even suspected her. She passed under the name of Edward Murray. Previous to engaging with Mr. Venables, she applied to Mr. Everdell, No. 302 Broadway, for a situation as clerk. She had no letter of recommendation, and Mr. E. declined engaging her without one. A day or two afterward she called again, with the following letter, purporting to have been written by her mother, which was found in her packet at the time bed, and objected to my occupation of his of her arrest. The letter was probably chamber. The pig having been turned out written either by herself or some friend. 2.353.09 Two Classes of Legislative Members. 7.631.72

There have been at Annapolis-and it is 9.279.36to be presumed there are at the capitals of other States-two classes of members of the Legislature : the one regularly voted for and elected by the people-the other, either self George Forster, produced a dozen of the larelected or commissioned by constituents who have a bill to be passed, or a charter to be granted, or a privilege to be obtained, through the officious instrumentality of such agents. To the first class is applied the descriptive and generic title of delegates ; to the second, the equally descriptive, but far less honora-ble, appellation of lobby members. The first are the nominal makers and rescinders of laws-the second, prompt, draught, and prepare bills, and look to their favorable reception, before they are submitted to the real members in high conclave assembled. The first class are supposed to be paid only by with equal facility, though it may well exthe State, and the second class to do the enthe state, and the second chies to do the set of the wonder, that any point inch tertainments of the season, supply oysters, well applied as to shear cold iron  $1\frac{1}{4}$  inch cite wonder, that any power could be so they have an opportunity, to assist needy members in their extremeties. Without their interference, the House is not expected to sit : they are the prompters, sceneshifters, and property-men of the House, and without their direction, scarcely a motion to adjourn can be offered. To this class should attention be given ; their reports of daily proceedings would be far more interesting than the reports of the open sittings of the people's representatives, and from them we could judge how far each representative transacted public business independently of the influence of considerations of personal benefit. We do not know of any direct offers of bribery which have been made by one, or accepted by the other, in times past ; but we are free to confess, that we should not be surprised to hear that offers and acceptance had been things of common happening. Men who employ their time and talents,

Progress in Iron Manufacture.

In 1847, (says the Sunderland Herald,) when Sir Robt. Stephenson designed the Britannia bridge, he wished to procure for the bottom of that structure the largest plates of iron which the skill of this country could afford. He employed all the leading makers of plates in the Staffordshire district, where that particular branch of the iron trade was then most successfully conducted and they put forth their best efforts to meet the views of an engineer whose undertakngs promised to open out a new and wide field for the consumption of plate iron. The largest plates required were 12 feet long, 30 inches wide, half an inch thick, having a superficial area of 30 feet, and weighing under 51 cwt. After the orders had been some months on hand, Sir Robert's agent wrote a note, saying that, with one exception, the makers were not prepared to supply such plates, and so difficult was the rolling and shearing found to be, with the machinery then in use, that he entertained fears of at least considerable delay.

Five years have not been idly spent by the iron trade. The Derwent Iron Company sent from their Consett works to the Great Exhibition of 1851, a plate 17 feet long, 48 inches wide, and half an inch thick for which the jury recommended the Council Medal as a proof of their opinion of its years. value to engineers engaged in the construction of large works. Last week the indefatigable manager of the Consett works, Mr. gest plates ever yet rolled in any establishment, being no less than 17 feet 10 inches long, 60 inches wide, and 14 inch thick, having a superficial area of 871 feet, nearly three times larger than the largest plates produced in 1847, and weighing 35 cwi-These plates were rolled without the slightest mishap or accident and, to an observer, as though the massive machinery was but doing its ordinary work. The plates weighed over two tons when they left the rolis, and were then taken to the shears, where thick. The commercial value of the discovery of iron stone in Cleveland is now so clearly developed, that this district connot fail to take a lending part in the iron trade. It is most important, however, that parties of capital and spirit are found, who are resolved to prosecute this important branch of industry in all its higher branches. Scotland has for years produced a very large proportion of raw pig iron, which has been send to other districts for conversion, but she has not taben any important stand in the market as a producer of bar or plate iron. The vast works on the Clyde are chiefly supplied from Staffordshire or this district. The iron-stone of Yorkshire and Durham, in combination with our invaluable coal, is capable, in the hands of powerful and skilful parties, of competing with any other part of the world in the very highest branches of manufacture. It is something to say that the county of Durpersuasive, gastronomic, or bivacious, for the longest rails that ever were made. We ham has produced the largest plates and tho triumphs.

The pleasures of travelling in the East, and the perfection of accommodations to be met with, is thus set forth by a recent wanderer in the interior of Turkey ; "We retired after supper to our dormitory, a detached room on the ground floor, in which there had been a large fire lighted to drive out the mosquitoes.
