The Eastern Question.

The latest news from Europe is to the 14th of February. Signs of war still loomed high and portentously above the horizon.-The French and English Governments are making vast military preparations, and very soon, it is believed, the terrible cry "Havoc!" will be heard from one end of the continent watched with a good deal of interest, as well to the other. The Czur, too, is preparing, on a large scale, for the coming struggle, as the novelty, as by the scientific observers he has been doing for the last ten months, and while he was amusing his antagonists presumptive, with conferences, notes, protetols, and protestations of his moderation and pence-preferring sentiments. He is as cunning as a fox, while he is as rugged as a bear, as those will find out who will try a hug with him. On the other hand, the lion of England and the eagle of France are los- and next from the mode in which they are ty-minded and magnanimous animals, who dug. The principal involved in the congo a good deal for chivalry and for every body's rights—so they say—and will not, of water to find its level—though lying hunneighbor; and in this they are right, but have been somewhat slow.

However, not withstanding that war is now impossible. The retirement of the Russian Ministers from London and Paris, has rather a squally aspect per se; but, on the other hand, they went away in a very good humor, and their passports were sent them in the same way. There was much expression of regret at the state of things, and fervent prayers for the restoration of harmony between the mighty Powers about to throttle each other; and in all this, though diplo-hardly feel strong enough to cope with them screwed, whereupon the tubes sink by their and Turkey and Austria, if not Prussia also, own weight and the force of the downward Belgium must go against him, or submit to Persia, that was set down for him all along. and he will get, it is supposed, no help from over forty feet had been attained. that quarter, while the Circassians, furnished as they will be abundantly with munitions of war, by France and England, will, under their able chief, Schamyl, (who has so long resisted Russia,) give him a good deal of annoyance. He has no prospect, therefore, that we can see, of carrying out | his designs, unless he can break up the coalition, and, if that can be done, he will do it.

One great advantage that the Czar will have in the contest is unity of purpose, of counsel, and of action, and he well understands this advantage, and his antagonists understand it also. It will be worth to him an army of two hundred thousand men; for the four Powers and Turkey, and two or three more allies perhaps, to carry on war jointly with harmony and vigor, without jealousies, without misunderstandings or clashing counsels, is next to impossible .-Such a thing has never been done, and never will be. The allies got along pretty well for a short time in 1813-14 against Napolcon, but there was a good deal of jarring and jenlousy; and when he left Elba they were about to break up in a row, on account chicfly of the very thing that causes the present difficulty—the grasping ambition of

The Governments of Sweden and Denmark have declared their intention of remaining neutral, should the expected war take place. But in doing this they are reckoning without their host. No neutrals will be recognized in Europe whose friendship or whose hostility will be of much account, and those two Powers are both strong enough to aid a friend or to injure an ene-The Emperor of the French has given the King of the Belgians his orders; which are, that he is to watch Prussin, if she shows any signs of hostility; and England will look after the Swedish and Danish fleets, and, to prevent them from falling into the hands of the Czar, will take possession of them very probably, as she did of the Dan-ish fleet in 1807. The rights of neutrals are rarely respected in tinte of war, unless they are able to challenge respect at the cannon's mouth. This has been witnessed over and over. Even the much-talked-about "armed neutrality," if one should be got up, to be respected, must be as strong as the belligerents. The United States may keep clear of this war, perhaps, but it will be because of our distance from the theatre of it, and because being pretty powerful, and having extensive commercial relations with all the parties, they may, for once, respect our neutrality and our rights, which they did not do during the last general war in Europe. tan has changed his Ministers, and that the new appointments are in favor of making peace with Russia. If this is so, it shows that the Sultan's resources are exhausted. or that the despairs of final and effectual aid from his allies. The London Times, of the 9th of February, says, that "the report of a pacific turn in the disposition of the Czar is probably only to be regarded as a fresh device to induce the allied Powers to relax their preparations." Quite likely.

What some men call plainness of speech, other men call impudence. What some call business shrewdness, others call dishonesty.

Artesian Wells.

The following remarks by the New Orleans Bee are made in connexion with an account of the progress made in boring for water at a spot in that city:

The experiment of digging an Artesian well, now in progress in Canal street, is by the public at large, who are attracted by who engerly embrace this opportunity of prosecution geolical investigations. We presume that most of our readers are aware that Artesian wells are so termed from the fact that the particular process of excavation applied to them was first used in the province of Arteis, France. It follows, therefore, that where-ever certain strata designated by geologists as impervious are presumed from observation and induction to lie at attainable depths these Artesian wells may be excavated with strong probability of success. The process is extremely curious. The width of the bore varies according to circumstances. The well now digging in Canal street, has a diameter of fourteen inches, matists were the parties, there is probably which is considered ample. Others think the water lies too deep to justify the labor, and expense; and others again, are of the opinion that if a vein of water is struck, the element will be salt, and therefore useless. These are but speculations, and must be taken as such.

Arrival of Nebraska Indians.

It will be recollected that, during the last ummer, the Commissioner of Indian Aflairs, Major Manypenny, visited the Indian tribes west of Missouri and Iowa, for the purpose of procuring their assent to the settlement of aged 9 years, our citizens on the lands reserved by them and of extinguishing their title in whole or in part to their soil. The commissioner held aged 41 years, and on the 13th of February, empty Barrels. Boxes, Casks, &c. Also a council with every tribe which he visited. Peggy May, consort of William May, aged With but few exceptions, they refused to 41 years. Treaties were, therefore, deferred until the present season, with the hope that Abraham, son of Henry and Rebecca Vanas good as new, Bureau, two Side-boards, the Indians might, in the mean time, see | dyke, aged 9 years. that their permanent interests required an entire transfer of all their lands, and their emoval to a new home.

The condition of the Indians west of Misouri and Iowa is not as prosperous as is desired. In several of the tribes are to be found some educated and intelligent men, and others who are able by the cultivation of the soil to subsist themselves. Among them, too, are some professors of religion .--But the mass of the Indian tribes are indolent and intemperate, and many of them are degraded and debased, as we learn from the report of the commissioner. On Monday night Major Gatewood arrived in this city, bringing with him sixteen chiefs of the tribes, respectively, of the Omahas, the Missourias, and the Oltoes. These red men are quartered at Jemmy Maher's the home of Indians from every direction visiting Washington, who never fail to honor him with the title of "father," on account of the kind treatment which they never fail to receive at his establishment, while, of course, they express a due measure of gratitude to his excellent wife for her hospitable and "motherly" care of them. From what we can learn the delegation want to hear what their "great father" has to say to them about parting with their lands in the Nebraska country, and to arrive to the best possible bargain in the way of treaty. They are dressed in the usual savage style, including heavy earbobs, head-dresses, necklaces of the claws of the grizzly bear, and such like adornments. They attracted much attention yesterday on the promenade, and caused somewhat of an excitement on their visit to the gallery of the House of Repre-sentatives, while that honorable body was engaged in electing a public printer. We presume that, in the course of a few days, they will have a talk with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in relation to the business which has induced their visit o Washington .- Washington Sentinel.

It is certain that Washington never gave even a hint of his views or wishes in regard to the disposition of his remains. He no doubt believed that his ashes would be claimed as national property, and be entombed with national honors; hence his silence on a subject that has agitated the American public for more than half a century." Mr. Curtis says: "It is high time the subject of the remains, and the remains themselves, were at rest. Presuming that government should purchase Mount Vernon, and determine that the ashes of the Chief should there find lasting repose, we would respectfully suggest that a sepulchre be erected on the site of the ancient family vault, a magnificent location having an extensive view of the surrounding country and of the noble Potomac that washes its base the massive structure, to be formed of white American marble in blocks each of a ton weight, a dome of copper, surmounted by an eagle in bronze, a bronze door, and for inscription two-words only that will speak volumes to all time—Pater Patrie.
