

The Greeks and the Turks.
We have received, by the Arabia, (says the New York Post) the following appeal from a prominent Greek now residing in Athens, but who was educated in the United States, which is understood to express the sentiment of his countrymen in relation to the strife now pending between Turkey and Russia.

AN APPEAL
To the Free and Benevolent Nation of the United States of America, by the Greeks of Macedonia, Thessaly, Thrace, Epirus, Ionia, and the Greek Islands.

Four hundred years of intolerable bondage, infinite and inexpressible sufferings, brought upon us by the yoke of the Musselmans—a yoke that made the cup of life to overflow with bitterness—oblige us to take up arms, that we might be free, and assert the truth that all men are born free and equal.

Christians of America free and happy people of the States; the present Panhellenic movement is but the continuation of the great work begun in 1821, which the whole world then rejected to see.

The citizens of the United States then heard of our wrongs, pitied us, and assisted us. For that same assistance we call upon you now. The present war is a holy war, it is a righteous war. We are struggling against oppression. It is the great struggle between light and darkness, the Gospel and the Koran.

Americans, your former compassion for the Greeks has not been forgotten by them. The American name has always been dear to the people of Greece. Our gratitude for your kindness past has lasted for more than thirty years, even to the present moment—we people have nothing to look back on our past conduct and feel discouraged to ask again for your assistance. And you, the Americans, can, with the approbation of Christian conscience, assist us again, having had no cause to repent of what you had for merly done in behalf of us.

Americans, for the sake of our fathers, whose precepts have been so elevating to the nations, and above all, to your classic institutions—assist us.

Benevolent Americans, for the sake of humanity—assist us.

Free Americans, for the sake of liberty and the exalted rights of human nature which you enjoy—assist us.

Christian Americans, for the sake of Him whom we both worship, who died for all and whose Testament you read in our language—assist us, as brothers in Christ.

Austria and the West.

Our Paris correspondent in a private note, states that he had just seen a gentleman who had an interview on the previous day with the Emperor, who said to him that he did not count with any degree of confidence on Austria's joining the Western Alliance;—he thought that she would play into the hands of Prussia until she should be severely beaten in the field, and that then both she and Prussia would join the Western Powers. The Emperor judges of Austrian policy with characteristic shrewdness. He is evidently determined to spare no effort to secure the alliance and aid of both the German Powers, for it is stated on good authority that he has given the Austrian Emperor the most satisfactory assurances, that he will aid him in the suppression of any insurrection that may break out in the Austrian dominions. But, if our correspondent's information is correct, he has evidently no hope of success.

We published yesterday among our foreign extracts, a letter from the Vienna correspondent of the London Times, in which the significant hint was thrown out that it might be advisable for the British Government to give the Austrian Emperor assurances similar to those which he had received from France, in regard to the suppression of insurrection. Hints of this sort in the columns of the Times, generally imply a good deal more than they express. It is quite possible that the English Cabinet may desire to test the popular feeling on this point, and to ascertain how far they might with safety go in pursuance of the policy indicated.—We venture to predict that the result of the experiment will not correspond with their hopes.

The British Government only obeyed the public sentiment in commencing the war at all. Sympathy with the oppressed, and the hope that despotism on the Continent might receive a serious blow, stimulated this warlike feeling on the part of the public. Any ministry which should now turn that war against popular rights, and promise aid in crushing revolution as the price of aid in its prosecution, would become inexpressibly odious to the British people. We do not believe they will venture on the experiment. The British people sympathize with the down-trodden millions of the Continent, however their rulers may espouse the cause of despotism.—New York Times.

Land in Great Britain.

At a recent meeting of the London Society of Arts, a paper was read by Mr. L. Levi, in which he stated that the arable and garden land of the United Kingdom, amounted to about 20,000,000 of acres, and the meadows, pastures, and marshes, to about 27,000,000. The number of farmers of Great Britain does not exceed 300,000. He continued:

We know our supplies: We know that a population of 25 millions will require 28 million quarters annually of wheat and flour besides what is wanted for cattle, horses, maling, and other purposes. Already our population is largely dependent on foreign-wheat. Estimating the yearly consumption of each individual at eight bushels, and taking the average yearly importation of wheat and wheat-flour, it seems that whilst from 1801 to 1810 the mean population of Great Britain being 11,799,725, the number of persons fed upon foreign wheat was 600,946, from 1841 to 1850, the mean population being 19,967,876, the number dependent upon foreign wheat and wheat-flour was not less than 2,818,328. Of late, the importation has been uniformly large, leaving a conviction that our agricultural produce does not keep pace with the increase of our population and with their growing resources.

Lower California.

The San Francisco Whig in the course of a sensible article on the marauding expedition of Colonel Walker, says—

"The descent upon Lower California, if it had been peaceable—its occupation, if it had been bloodless—its separation from the grasp of Mexico, if it had been sanctioned by the people of the country,—we should have looked upon as legitimate and even desirable;—but we have from the first declared that there existed no such necessity for revolutionizing that State at least, as to justify a single act of violence by an invading hand. Had the people themselves deemed the connection with the Central Government so onerous as to wish it dissolved by force, it would have been different. They have the same right of revolution as every other people who think they are oppressed. But the result proves this was not the case. There has been no enthusiasm and even little toleration manifested in behalf of the invasion; on the contrary, many lives of native Californians have been sacrificed in the attempt to repel the invaders. This we have ever regarded as uncalculated for any exigency, and therefore unjustifiable."

MARRIED.
