Poetry.

Is there a man a whit the better For his riches and his gains? For his acres and his palace— If his inmost heart is callous,

Is a man a whit the better?

And it a man's no whit the bet For his coffers and his mines, For his purple and fine linen, For his vineyards and his vines, Why do thousands bend the knee, And cringo in mean servility. If a man's no whit the better?

Is a man a whit the worse

For a lowly dress of rags?
Though he owns no tordly rental,
If his heart is kind and gentle,

Is a man a bit the worse?

For an empty, oven pocket,
And a brawny, working hand,
Why do thousands pass him by
With a cold and scornful eye,
If a man's no whit the worse?

For a poor and lowly stand,

And if a man's no bit the worse

As was usual after an ebullition of passion. Mrs. Lyon, deeply distressed in spirits, as well as discouraged, retired from her family to grieve and weep: Lifting the frightened baby from the floor, she drew its head tenderly against her bosom, and leaving the nursery, sought the quiet of her room. There, in repentance and humiliation, she recalled the stormy scene through which she just passed, and blamed herself for yielding blindly to passion, instead of meeting the trouble among her children with a quiet discrimination.

To weeping, calmness succeeded. Still she was perplexed in mind, as well as grieved at her own want of self-control. What was to be done with her children? How were they to be governed aright? Painfully did she feel her own unfitness for the task. By this time the baby was asleep, and the mother felt some thing of that tranquil peace that every true mother knows when a young babe is slumber ing on her bosom. A book lay on the shelf near where she was sitting, and Mrs. Lyon scarcely conscious of the act, reached out he hand for the volume. She opened, withou feeling interest in its contents, but she had read only a few sentences when this remark arrested her attention:

"All right government of children begin with self government."

The words seemed written for her, and the truth expressed was elevated instantly into perception. She saw it in the clearest light, and closed the book and bowed her head in sad acknowledgement of her own errors. Thus for some time she had been sitting, when the murner of voices from below grew more and more distinct, and she was soon aroused to the painful fact that, as usual when left alone; the hildren were wrangling among themselves Various noises, as of pounding on and throw-ing about chairs and other pieces of furniture were heard, and at length a loud scream, min cled with angry vociferations, smote upon he

Indignation swelled instantly in the heart of Mrs. Lyon, and hurriedly placing the sleeping baby in its crib, she started for the scene of disorder, moved by impulse to punish severel the young rebels against authority, and was half way down the stairs when her feet were checked by a rememberance of the sentiment

"All right government of children begins

"This is no spirit in which to meet my striving for victory. From the nursery came louder sounds of disorder. How weak the mother felt! Yet, in this very weakness was strongth.

"I must not stand idly here," she said, as a sharp cry of anguish smote her ears, and so she moved on quickly, and opening the nursery door, stood revealed to her children. Julia had just raised her hand to strike Emily, who stood confronting her with a fiery face. Both were a little startled at their mother's sudden

And now the mother was conscious of a new power over the young rebels of her household. "Emily," said she, speaking mildly, and yet a with a touch of sorrow in her voice she could MORE TRUTH THAN POETRY not subdue, 'I wish you would go up into my room and sit with Mary while she sleeps." Without a sign of opposition, or even reluctance, Emily went quietly from the nursery, in obedience to her mother's desires.

"This room is very much in disorder, Julia,"

Many times had Mrs. Lyons said under like circumstauce, "Why don't you put things to ights?" or, "I never saw such girls. If all the room was topsey-turvey, and the floor an inch tnick with dirt, you'd never turn over a hand to put things in order," cr, "Go and get the broom this moment, and sweep up this room. You're the laziest girl that ever lived." Many, many times, as we have said, had such language been addressed by Mrs. Lyon, under like circumstances, to Julia and her sisters, "ithout predictions and the sisters," But now the mild intimation that the room was a pairs in disorder, produced the effects desired. Jula went quickly about the work of restoring things to their right places, and in a few min the state order was apparent where confusion reign that debefore. ade mother's head ache." "Does it make your head ache, mother ?". asked the child curiously, and with a pitying tone in his voice, as he came creeping up to this mother's side, and looking at her as if in doubt whether he would be repulsed or not.

"Sometimes, it does, my son," replied Mrs.
Lyon, kindly, "and it is always unpleasant.

Won't you try to play without making so much

"Yes, mother, I'll try," answered the little fellow cheerfully. "But I'll forget sometimes."

Frightened by all this, the younger children, whose incessant noise for the last half hour had contributed to the overthrow of their hour had contributed to the overturow or their mother's temper, became suddenly quiet, and skulked away into the corners; and the baby, that was seated on the floor between two pil-Only first fruits these.
