Green Corn Sour.—Put on a knuckel of to the dull heavy pains caused by the user of the veal to be line three quarts of water, and three teaspoonsful of salt. Cut the corn off of one dezenears, and put it on to be with the veal.

When the real is tender the sour is done.— When the real is tender the soup is done. Then roll an ounce of butter in flour and add to it before it is served. If the fire has been very hot and the water has boiled away too much, a little more may be added.

STEWED TOWATOES .- If they are not very ripe, pour boiling water over them, and let them stand a few minutes, the skin will peel off very easily. Then cut them up, put them in a stew pan without any water, and cook them till they are soft. If they prove too juicy, dip some of the water out and mash them fine. Season with butter, cayenne peper and salt. They may be thickened with bread crumbs or crated crackers, if preferred.

FOR THE TEETH .- At the American Dental Association recently in session, the Committee on Dentifrices and washes recommended the following recipe for a tooth powder : chalk, three pounds; pulverized Peruvian bark, two pounds; Orris root, one pound; white sugar, one and one half pounds; Castile soap, one ounce; carbonate of soda, one ounce; oil of cassafras, eighty drops. To make a touth paste add to the foregoing three cunces of glycerine and a sufficient quantity of honey to make the preparation of the prope

SANDWICHES FOR PARTIES .- Chop fine some cold pressed ham, say a quarter of a pound; put it in a basin with a table spoonfull of chop-ped pickels, and a teaspoonfull of mustard, a little pepper or Cayenne; put about six ounces rinto a basin, and with a spoon stir quickly till it forms a kind of cream : add the ham and seasoning, mix all well, have the sandwich bread cut in thin slices; have already cut, thinly intermixed with fat, either cold roast beef, veal. lamb, mutton, poultry, fowl, pheasant, grouse, partridge, &c., any or which lay evenly, and not too thick, on your bread; senson with a little salt and pepper; cover over with another piece of bread; when your sandwich is ready, cut them in any shape you like, but rather small and tastily, and serve. You may keep them in a cool place if not wanted, as they will keep good under

CANNING CORN.—We copy the following from that good periodical, the Prairie Farmer.—Some one is inquiring for a receipt for canning corn. Last fall we saw in the Farmer the modus operandi of canning corn followed by a factory in New York; among other operations they boiled it six hours. We followed the rule laid down but with no better success then your correspondent. We did some, however, but not by canning nor by drying it, but by salting it down in crocks or Our method is as follows:

Take your crock or tub, put in a laver o corn two or three inches, then a sprinkling of salt, you must use your own judgment for the quantity of salt, as I made no note of the When your vessel is full pross it mount. down, put a weight on it and let it stand. In the course of three or tour days it will ferment, but that is no evidence that the corn is spoiling, for it will ferment. It is prepared by sonking in water over night, change the water as often as necessary to make it fresh enough to suit. Cook the same as green corn.
This receipt is old; no doubt a great many know its value and others do not. I would like to hear from these who have canned corn

PROTECTING THE WHEAT PLANT .- All ex perience teaches that over a great portion of ir country the wheat crop is liable to be seriously injured by our severe winters. In very extended sections this was the case with the wheat sown last fail. We doubt if farm ers have exerted themselves to prevent failures from this cause, too often considering, it a matter entirely beyond their control. They sow wheat year after year, but always with a fear that a long, severe, changeable winter will deprive them of a crop. As a protection the Prairie Farmer recommends the follow spread over the wheat field late in the fall or in early winter will be exceedingly effectual in keeping the plants sheltered from winds and frosts, at the same time the land is benefited by the manure. This it may not always be convenient to do. To those thus situated we would recommend the sowing of buck-wheat or oats with the wheat. If oats, sow say one and a half bushels peracre, broadcast, just before drilling in the wheat if the drill is used. Such a course will prevent the dist from being blown from about the tender roots, thus preventing the frost from throwing out the plants, and in spring the mulch rots, affording them nourishment. This is no id e theory, but has the practice of successfu farmers to support it. We cannot urge its adoption too strongly. Those who practice sowing oats or buckwheat are in the habit of sowing early that a good growth may be made before winter sets in
