ALLENTOWN, November 17th, 1869.

MARTIN KEMMERER, ESQ., Allentown, Agent of the World Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York.

Dear Sir:—Permit us to thank you for the prompt manner in which you have collected for us the $4000 insured in your Company on the life of Daniel H. Kemmerer, our husband and brother. We are truly thankful to you for having persuaded him two years ago to make this wise provision for the wants of his family. They he was in the enjoyment of excellent health, with a past life and family record both indicative of many years of usefulness in our midst, and to us then this provision seemed almost useless and unnecessary. But Providence, in the wisdom which is so often hard for us to understand, ordained otherwise, and from a severe attack of Typhoid Fever in April last he never entirely recovered, but continued sinking until his sufferings were ended, and he departed this life a few weeks ago. Always careful of his loved ones, this provision for their needs recalls to us anew his forethought and love, and from the midst of our grief and tears we would thus publicly testify to the value of Life Insurance, and to the reliability and promptness of the World Mutual Life, which you represent, in particular. May this example be the cause of many imitating the example of our departed loved one's care and forethought, and likewise insure at once, for no one knows the day or hour in which they may be taken sick or called away, and thus be prevented from insuring.

THE OLD ALLENTOWN CHINA AND GLASSWARE STORE STILL AHEAD OF ALL COMPETITION.

Fifteen years experience and means to buy not only for cash but during the seasons and times of most advantage, enables the proprietor to offer goods at lower prices than those not having these advantages. I return my sincere thanks to the people of this city and Lehigh and adjoining counties for appreciating these facts by their constantly increasing patronage. Necessitating various enlargements of our store, the last of which but recently completed, gives us now about twenty-one hundred feet of shelving one foot wide. Nearly half a mile of shelving twelve inches wide, well filled with goods, besides large quantities on the floor. It is very evident there are no two stores in the county put together have such a stock as this or the trade requiring it. It is therefore the interest of all to call and examine the goods and prices at this store before buying elsewhere. The proprietor being fully conscious of his advantages, will not under any honorable circumstances permit any person to undersell him in these goods. Such things may be pretended by those having no knowledge of the business, and may find bragadocia and bombast a convenient article to hide their deficiencies in other respects, but it will not bear the inspection of a discerning public. Our goods are of the latest and most improved patterns, our heavy sales requiring almost an entire renewal of stock two or three times annually, thus preventing the possibility of old stock on hand. As I am now selling off preparatory to retire from active business, greater inducements than heretofore are offered in the price of goods to all buyers, at the China Store, 37 E. Hamilton St., nearly opposite the German Reformed Church.

TO MISS SUSAN B. ANTHONY.

ON HER FIFTIETH BIRTHDAY.

We touch our caps, and place to-night
The victor's wreath upon her,
The woman who outranks us all
In courage and in honor.

While others in domestic broils
Have proved by word and carriage,
That one of the United States
Is not the state of marriage

She caring not for loss of men,
Nor for the world's confusion,
Has carried on a civil war,
And made a "Revolution!"

True, other women have been brave
When banded or husbanded;
But she has bravely fought her way
Alone and single-handed.

And think of her unselfish strength
Her generous disposition,
Who never made a lasting prop
Out of a proposition.

She might have chosen an honest name,
And none have scorned or hissed it;
Have written Mrs. Jones or Smith,
But, strange to say, she missed it.

For fifty years to come may she
Grow rich, and ripe, and mellow
Be quoted even above "par."
Or any other fellow!

And speak the truth from pole to pole,
And keep her light a-burning,
Before she cuts her stick to go
The way there's no returning.

Because her motto, grand, hath been
The right of every human,
And first and last, and right or wrong
She takes the side of woman.

"A perfect woman, nobly planned,"
To aid not to amuse one,
Take her for all in all we ne'er

Phoebe Cary.

INCIDENT IN THE LIFE OF CAPTAIN SAM. BRADY.

A STORY OF FORT McINTOSH AND BRADY'S RUN.

About thirty miles below the present city of Pittsburgh, and where Beaver now stands, stood an ancient fort, known as Fort McIntosh. It was built by a revolutionary general of that name, in the summer of 1778. It was one of the forts which was intended to guard the people who lived south of the Ohio river, from the incursions of the savages to the northward. This fort was one of the favorite resorts of the great Indian spy and hunter, Captain Samuel Brady, although his usual headquarters was Pittsburgh, then consisting of a rude fort and a score or two of rough frontier tenements.

Brady had emigrated westward or rather had marched thither in 1778, a lieutenant in the distinguished Eighth Pennsylvania Regiment, under the command of General Richard Brodhead, of Easton. When, in the spring of 1779, McIntosh retired from command in the West, Brodhead succeeded him and remained at Pittsburgh until 1781.

Soon after his advent to the West, Brady was breveted Captain. He had served at the siege of Boston, fought at Long Island, and White Plains, gone through the whole of the terrible campaign of Trenton and Princeton, suffered at Valley Forge, distinguished himself at Germantown and at Brandywine, and narrowly escaped death at Paoli. But his taste led him to the erratic mode of warfare known upon the frontier. Indeed, his early education upon the upper Susquehanna had inculcated and developed those tastes from the very earliest boyhood. Hating an Indian with that instinctive hatred, which is begotten in the bosom of the white race by long years of contest and outrage, a bitter intensity was imparted to the feeling in this case by the murder of his father and younger brother by the Indians, under trying and terrible circumstances.

Having premised this much by way of introduction it brings us to the eventful morning in which Brady set out from fort McIntosh for Pittsburgh. He had with him two of his trusty and well trained followers. These were not attached to the regular army, as he was, but were scouts and spies, who had been with him upon many an expedition. They were Thomas Bevington and Benjamin Biggs.

Brady resolved to follow the northern bank of the Ohio. Biggs objected to this, upon the ground, that the woods were full of savages. Brady, however, had resolved to travel by the old Indian path, and having once made up his mind no consideration could deter him from carrying out his determination. Bevington had such implicit faith in his ability to lead, that he never once thought of questioning his will.

Quite a discussion arose between Biggs and his captain at the mouth of the Beaver river, about a mile above the fort and where they must cross the Ohio if they didn't want to continue on the southern side. Biggs finally waived his objections and they crossed the Ohio and proceeded with the habitual caution of woodsmen who fully understand their business.

They had started early and by rapid traveling they had reached, ere noon came, the piece of bottom land on the north side of the river, below "the narrows." This is where Sewickly now stands. Upon this bottom a pioneer more daring than most others had built a cabin and opened a small spot of cleared land. He had planted in it corn, and it gave promise of a most abundant harvest. But as they approached the edge of the clearing, just outside of the fence, Brady discovered "Indian signs" as he called them. His companions discovered them almost as quick as he, and at once in low tones communicated to each other the necessity of a keen watch.

They slowly trailed along the side of the fence toward the house, whose situation they all knew, until they stood upon the brow of the bluff which overlooked it. A sight of the most terrible description met their eyes. The cabin lay a mass of smouldering ruins, from which a dull blue smoke arose in the clear August sunshine. They observed everything around it. Brady knew it was customary for the Indians after they had fired a settler's cabin if there was no immediate danger to retire to the woods close at hand, and watch the approach of the family who might chance to be absent when they made the descent. Not knowing but that they were even then lying close at hand, he left Bevington to watch the ruins, lying under cover whilst he proceeded to the northward and Biggs southward to make discoveries. Both were to return to Bevington if they found no Indians. If they came across the perpetrators, and they were too numerous to be attacked regularly, Brady declared it to be his purpose to have one fire at them, and that should be the signal for both of his followers to make the best of their way to the fort.

All this rapidly transpired, and with Brady to decide was to act. As he stole cautiously around the northern side of the enclosure he heard a voice in the distance singing. He listened keenly and soon discovered from its intonations that it was a white man's. He passed rapidly in the direction from which the sound came. As it approached he concealed himself behind the trunk of a large tree. Presently a white man, riding a fine horse, came slowly down the path.

The form was that of Albert Gray, the stalwart, brave, devil-may-care settler, who had built him a home many miles away from the fort, where no one else would have dared to take a family but himself.

Brady wore, as he almost always did, the Indian garb and had war paint on his face. He knew that if he showed himself upon the path Gray would shoot, taking him to be an Indian. He therefore suffered Gray quietly to approach his lurking place. When the time came he sprang forward ere the settler could have time to prepare, drew his tomahawk and siezing him dragged him from his horse. As he did so he whispered to him:

"I am Captain Brady; for God's sake be quiet."

Gray, with the instinctive feeling of one who knew there was danger, and with that vivid presence of mind which characterizes those acquainted with frontier life, ceased at once to struggle. The horse had been startled by the sudden onslaught, and sprang to one side. Ere he had time to leap forward Brady had caught him by the bridle. His loud snorting threatened to arouse any one who was near. The Captain soon soothed the frightened animal into quiet.

Gray now hurridly asked Brady what the danger was. The strong, vigorous spy turned away his face unable to answer him. The settler's excited fears were turned into realities. The manly form shook like an aspen leaf, while tears of emotion fell as large drops of water over his bronzed face. Brady permitted the indulgence for a moment, whilst he led the horse into a thicket close at hand and tied him. When he returned Gray had sunk to the ground, and a great tremulous convulsion writhed over him. Brady quietly touched him and said:

"Come."

Gray at once arose and had gone but a few yards until every trace of emotion had apparently vanished. He was no longer the bereaved husband and father, but he was the sturdy, well-trained hunter, whose ear and eye were acutely alive to every sight or sound, the waving of a leaf or the crackling of the smallest twig.

He desired to proceed directly towards the house, but Brady objected to this, and they passed down toward the river bank. As they proceeded they saw from the moccassin prints and tracks of horses upon the place where the earth was moist, that the party was quite a numerous one. After thoroughly examining every cover and possible place of concealment, they passed on to the southward, and came back in that direction to the spot where Bevington stood sentry.

When they reached him they found that Biggs had not returned. In a few minutes he came and reported that the trail was large and broad; the Indians had taken no pains to conceal their tracks—they simply had struck back into the country so as to avoid coming in contact with the spies whom they supposed to be lingering along the river.

The whole four now went down to the cabin and carefully examined the ruins. After a long and minute search, Brady discovered that none of the inmates had been consumed. This announcement at once dispelled the most harrowing fears of Gray. As soon as all that could be discovered had been ascertained, each one of the party proposed some course of action. One desired to go to Pittsburgh and obtain assistance—another thought it best to return to McIntosh and get some volunteers there. Brady listened patiently to both these propositions, but arose quickly, and after talking a moment apart with Biggs, he said:

"Come."

Gray and Bevington obeyed at once, nor did Biggs object. Brady struck the trail and began pursuit in that tremendously rapid manner for which he was so famous. It was evident that if the savages were overtaken it could only be done by the utmost exertion. They were some hours ahead, and from the number of their horses must be nearly all mounted. Brady felt that if they were not overtaken that night the pursuit would be utterly futile.

It was evident that the band had been south of the Ohio and plundered the homes of the settlers. They had pounced upon the family of Gray upon their return.

When the pursuit began, it must have been two o'clock. At least two hours had been consumed by the spies in making the necessary explorations about the house ere they approached it and in examining the ruins. Not a word was spoken upon the route by any one. Their leader kept steadily in advance. Occasionally he would diverge from the track but only to take it up a mile or so in advance. The Captain's intimate knowledge of the topography of the country enabled him to anticipate what points they would make. Thus he gained rapidly upon them by proceeding more nearly in a straight line towards the point at which they aimed to cross the Beaver river.

At last convinced from the general direction in which the trail led, that he could divine with absolute certainty the spot where they would ford that stream, he abandoned it and struck boldly across the country. The accuracy of his judgment was vindicated by the fact, that from an elevated crest of a long line of hills, he saw the Indians, with their victims just disappearing up a ravine on the opposite side of the Beaver, above what is now known as the "Alum Rocks" and below Beaver Falls, (Old Brighton). He counted as they slowly filed their way up its ascent under the rays of the declining sun. There were thirteen warriors, eight of whom were mounted—another woman, besides Gray's wife, was in the cavalcade, and the children.

The odds seemed fearful to Biggs and Bevington; although Brady made no comments. The moment they had passed out of sight Brady again pushed forward with unflagging energy, nor did his followers hesitate. There was not a man among them whose muscles were not tense and rigid as whip-cord, from the exercise and training, from hardship and exposure. Gray's whole form seemed to dilate twice its natural size at the sight of his wife and children. Terrible was the vengeance he swore.

Just as the sun set the spies crossed the stream and began to ascend the ravine. It was evident that the Indians intended to camp for the night some distance up a small creek or run which debouches into Beaver river about two miles from the location of fort McIntosh and two below the ravine. The spot, owing to the peninsular form of the tongue of land lying west of the Beaver, at which they expected to encamp, was full ten miles from the fort. Here there was a famous spring so deftly and cunningly situated in a deep dell and so densely enclosed with thick mountain pines that there was little danger of discovery. Even they might light a fire and could not be seen one hundred yards.

The proceedings of their leader, which would have been totally inexplicable to all others, were partially if not fully understood by his followers. At least they did not hesitate or question him. When dark came Brady pushed forward with as much apparent certainty as he had done during the day. So rapid was the progress that the Indians had just kindled their fire and cooked their meal when their mortal foe, whose presence they dreaded as much as that of the small pox, stood upon a huge rock looking down upon them.

His party had been left a short distance in the rear at a convenient spot while he went forward to reconnoitre. There they remained impatiently for three mortal hours. They discussed in low tones the extreme disparity of the force, the propriety of going to McIntosh for assistance. But all agreed that if Brady ordered them to attack, success was certain. However impatient they were he returned at last.

He described to them how the women and children lay within a center of a crescent formed by the savages as they slept. Their guns were stacked upon the right and most of their tomahawks. They were not more than fifteen feet from them. He had crawled within fifty feet of them when the snorting of the horses, occasioned by the approach of wild beasts, had aroused a number of the savages from their light slumbers and he had been compelled to l
