While a weary wanderer gathered
Hope and heart on life's dark way,
By its faithful promise shining
Clearer day by day.

Than the calmest lake, and clear
As the heavens that gazed upon it,
With no wave of hope and fear;
But a storm had swept across it,
And its deepest depths were stirred,
Never, never more to slumber,
Only by a word.

I have known a word more gentle

In a listening heart it nestled.

And it lived forever there;

Than the breath of summer air,

And it lived forever there;

Not the beating of its prison

Stirred it ever, night or day,

Only with the heart's last throbbing

Could it pass away.

It was on a Sunday morning, "ages long ago," that the miller of this mill and his whole COOPER & CONARD. family went forth to hear the holy mass, at the church attached to Sweetheart's Abbey. The mill-which was also his residence was left in charge of a servant girl named Jenny, a stout-hearted lass, who had long lived with him in that capacity. An infant child, of an age unfit for church, was left in her charge likewise. The girl was busily employed in preparing the dinner, when who should enter but an old sweetheart of hers, named Rerrick Lochdee. Rerrick was an idle, graceless fellow, whom the miller had forbade the house; but whom Jenny only liked, perhaps the better, because others gave him no countenance. She was glad to see him, and she told him so; and gave him something to cut, and gossipped with him as he despatched the food she set before him. As he ate, however, he let fall his knife.

THE INVENTION OF CAST STEEL. The other ruflian was brought down from The process of converting iron into steel had long been known among Eastern nations before it was introduced into Europe. The Hindoos were especially skilled in the art of making steel, as, indeed, they are to this day. The art seems to have been well known in Germany in the Middle Ages. Sheffleld be-The bridegroom was the miller's son, who came distinguished for its manufacture of iron had loved her long and well, but with a pass and steel as far back as the thirteenth century. The invention of cast steel is due to Benjamin Huntsman, of Astercliffe, near Sheffleld Benjamin Hantsman was born of German parents, in Licolnshire, in 1704. His experiments, however, extended over many years. Long after his death, the memorials of the numerous failures through which he toilsomely worked his way to success, were brought to light in the shape of many hundred weights of spoiled steel, found buried excellent shot, was busily loading his gun, while all the other sailors pointed to the disin the earth in different places about his manufactory. But his perseverance was at last rewarded, and his invention so far perfected, that, although the making of cast steel is now conducted with greater economy and dex terity, it is questionable whether any maker since has been able to surpass the quality of

From this time "a covey of crocodiles" was a frequent sight; once as many as sixteen, some of them very large, were discovered in a band. It was not often that they allowed the vessel to approach near enough to afford the opportunity of a good shot, but now and then they gave Mustapha a chance. He was always on the alert, and most desirous to kill one. The young people felt as anxious, and pleased themselves with the notion of having it stuffed and sent home. The sailors, too, were much interested in Mustapha's success. They looked forward to some hearty meals on the fiesh, which is considered a great delicacy among the Arabs. MEXICO. Preparation now began for saddling the Endemoniado, no casy task, for, in order to saddle him, it was necessary to keep him on his legs; and, as if he had guessed the project of the vanqueros, he began to kick out furiously. A lasso was passed under the fetlock of the left hind-leg, and fastened tightly to the breast-leather of the horse, so as to press the thigh against the belly. The right front leg was bent by the same means, and, thus kept in equilibrium, the horse was condemned to immobility. Benito seized his heavy saddle by the pummel and threw it over the back of the horse, who shook and trembled when his loins felt this burden, and the large wooden stirrups rebounded against his sides. The girth was violently tightened under the belly, and the vaquero seated himself on the sand to fasten his spurs on his feet. At this moment I glanced towards the stand. Maria Antonia was motionless; but her large black eyes, immoderately open, sparkled in her now pale face, and the agita tion of her bosom betrayed her agony, Don Ramon himself seemed frightened, and once I hoped he was about to recall the permission most certain death. Benito, without seeming shaken by these impetuous bounds, still kept on the defensive, roughly kicking away the beast's mouth as it tried to bite his legs. The foiled Endemoniado reared and creaked, and grouned, according as they fication, 'walk off on his ear,' 'a sadder and a suddenly on his haunches. The spectators all screamed; but the pummle of the saddle alone had knocked against the earth with a lugubrious sound. Benito, foreseeing the shock, had sprung rapidly to the ground. rently the life of a horse in question, "is the rascal going to cut the Endemoniado's throat?" Indignation flashed from Maria's-Antonia's black eyes at the supposition that a man whom she had distinguished could be a coward, and a superb smile of pride lighted up her features at the sight of Benito, who, in a fit of wild temerity, intoxicated, no doubt, by the presence of his beloved, had cut the horse's snaffle and thus placed himself, without bridle, at the mercy of an untameable animal. Freed from the bozal which compressed his nostrils, Endemoniado noisily breathed the air of the forests, shook the waves of his golden mane, and set off in the direction of the lopped tree .-Such was the impetuosity of his career, that it seemed impossible to prevent his dashing against the obstacle in his way. therefore, could preserve the rider from the fate awaiting him. The Endemoniado was only a few yards off the fatal trunk, when, by a sudden and unexpected movement. Benito pulled of his broad-brimmed hat, and, at the moment when a final bound was about to end the struggle, the hat, interposed between the tree and the horse, made the latter spring with terror in another direction. We then witnessed the singular spectacle of a rider without a bridle guiding his unmanageable horse, which sprang from side to side as the bugbear passed from one eye to the other. The Endemoniado, shuddering with rage, passed thus beneath the stand, where Maria-Antonia rewarded Benito's fortunate temerity, with a glance. The pride of triumph, which brought out the energetic and masculine beauty of the horsemen, and lighted up his brow, over which the wind waved his floating hair, wonderfully justified the young girl's choice. Giving a fresh impulse to the horse, which was panting and disconcerted by this unexpected resistence, Benito allowed him to take the direction of the forest. We beheld him for a few seconds shaken like a reed by the furious bounds of the same of the animal, but we soon lost sight of him.
