THE WARAND NEUTRALITY. The requirements of journalism, properly considered, are such, that in this hour of supreme peril to millions of our fellow men in Europe, none but the best considered words should be used by those who, in a greater or less degree, influence public opinion. War is always to be deplored, to be shuddered at, to be only accepted as the last resort. In this age of Christian progress when the humanizing influences of the gospel of Christ are rapidly advancing the best interests of all sorts and conditions of men, ensuring the progress of liberty and dispelling the darkness rance, the cultivated mind revolts at the sight this horrible Maelstrom of war, which is sucking into it, the gains, the hopes, the progress of the age. With one accord the press of two continents have deplored condemned and criticised the conduct of those who, from their several standpoints, seem to be respon Of course the journals of France and Prussia have been strong in their expressions 28, 1814, that he "gave an earnest of his value of condemnation against their enemy and firm in the admiration of their own countrymen; Lut it is to be deplored that some of our own journalists have departed from the dignified

ADMIRAL FARRAGUT DEAD.

Farragut is dead. Along with the news o French defeats and the wasting away of the French Empire comes this sad bereavement o America. At a time when the remnant of our navy is floating peacefully in foreign waers or doing quiet duty at home the great lea ler has gone to sleep in death. It seems inconceivable that a man who has won enduring fame through the smoke and din and carnage of battle should pass through scenes of each county shall be represented by at least danger with hair-breadth escapes to die, in so short a time, a lingering death of disease. His loss is none the less to be felt by the nation. His carnest patriotism which caused him to give up friends and relatives for his country's sake, when he was offered any position in the Confederacy he could desire, is remembered as well as his noble deeds of daring. David Glascoe Farragut was born at Campell's Station, East Tennessee, on July 5, 1801. His early life was a constant struggle with poverty. At eleven years of age he was appointed a midshipman, and, the naval academy not being then in existence, he was ordered to sen to get his schooling on board a money for them while they sleep. # Moyer's Improved Patent Siphon.

A NEW AND WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, ADAPTED TO FARM AND ORE MINES. A new method of transporting water over a bill or out of a well. It is cheaper than any pump or ram. Its superfority over the ordinary Siphon consists in the attachment of a vertical tube D, with the pipe A, at the point 3, which is higher than the receiving end of the pipe. This tube is open at its upper end, to provide for a column of air to press upon the water in the pipe A at that point. Then, if the water should at any time cease to flow into the receiving end, although it will run out of the discharging should at any time cease to flow into the receiving end, although it will run out of the discharging end beyond the vertical tube D, the pressure of the column of air in the tube upon the water at this point counteracts the suction, whereby the water is retained in the Siphon, and loss of time in producing an artificial suction is saved.
