Those efforts lave now of his victim, and the cases have been numercame much less burdensome, but the very fact of this revision and reduction is now used as an argument against the continuance tion of the tax, on the grounds that it does not pay for collecting, and that there is sufamounts to, and if that be true it certainly is One of the prison keepers was attracted by not worth while to continue the tax just for the sake of having people pay it. If it is of no advantage to the Government, and if the out it, by all means let it be abolished. It quently he made a full confession of his conhas always seemed to us, however, that under the present exemptions the income tax was really much less burdensome to the country then many other taxes, and we have seen no special objection to retaining it. The num bur of persons who are called upon to pay income taxes as the law now stands is not very large, and it is a question whether accumulated wealth ought not to be called upon to bear a part of the burdens of taxation. present law calls for a three per cent. tax upon net incomes over twenty five hundred dollars, and that amount of exemption of course clears all persons living upon moderate salaries and upon moderate fixed incomes. A single wealthy man, like William B. Astor, pays more income tax than several entire States, and we have never seen why it was more burdensome for the people at large to have Mr. Astor and A. T. Stewart pay a three per cent. tax upon their large incomes than it would be for the people themselves to raise an equal amount of tax in other ways. The taxes on productive industry are certainly more burdensome upon the masses of the people than those upon accumulated wealth, but if the accumulated wealth of the country does not pay more than tax enough to pay for its collection it is of no benefit to the country to Gen. Pleasanton ought to know whereof he affirms, and his statements will probably have weight with the Ways and Means Committee which is now considering the matter.
