NEAL DOW. Man's Neck Broken in the The Lecture on Wednesday Evening.

On Wednesday evening the Court House wa partially filled with an intelligent audience to lis-Filday morning the city was throwh into a fever ten to the lecture of Gen. Neal Dow. The lecture ent of excitement over the report of a murder which was alleged to have been commlited at the was one of a series now delivered in the principal cities and towns of the State under the auspices lager beer saloon of John Fetter, corner of Union of a committee of leading temperance men at and Water streets, in the Second Ward. Innumer whose invitation Gen. Dow was induced to come able were the rumors which flew from mouth to to Pennsylvania for a short time to enlighten the outh, one alleging that a German named John people in regard to the operations of prohibitory Kerner, who worked with Green's men in the iron

He was Mayor of the city of Portland at that time mictor, and was found dead by the police. The and assisted largely in the first execution of the law. He is therefore entirely familiar with its ruth, as near as we can ascertain, is as follows is a two-story brick building at the corner of Unior workings from the beginning. Gen. Dow is a medium sized man, very compactly built, with a pleasing countenance, and a temperament indicat a basement front on Water street, a verandal ing much mental activity, with physical vigor running along the front, and protected by an iron sufficient to give strength and force to the work The sign indicates that lager beer is ings of the mind. He is a pleasant speaker, rather sold here by John Fetter, but to what other uses the establishment is put we do not know, though rapid, yet fluent, and without any pretensions to oratory has no trouble in securing the attention of his audience. His style is of the conversational reports are not very favorable to the reputation order, and there is an earnestness about it which shows that his heart is in the cause he is advocaing. Unlike Gough he addresses himself more to the understanding than to the feelings of his an dience. His forte is the argumentative, with chough of natural humor interspersed to keep hi andience in a pleasant mood. His address on thi occasion was a strong argument in favor of total abstinence as well as prohibition. He said then s nothing, except our relations to God, more im portant as affecting the interests of the nation and society than the subject of temperance. He could not understand how any intelligent and fair inded man can fall to view this question in the same manner as he did-can deny that Intemper nce is a great evil, and that society has a righ to protect itself from its ravages. And yet there e such men who oppose temperance. A prominent Doctor of Divinity in a public meeting in Boston a few years ago denounced total abstinence and advocated the uso of intoxicating liquors. He ook the ground that there is no danger in using was soon confirmed by an examination made by liquors in moderation. As well might a recruiting sergeant, seventy years of age, and who had passed through numerous battles unbarmed, say to those that purpose. She asked her husband, who was at the barn, for a lead pencil with which to mark the eggs. He told her she would flud one in the tool box in the wood shed. She went there and while taking down the tool box some matches were ignited and a can of powder fell to the ground, the matches falling upon it and igniting the powder, which set her clothing on fire. Her frantic screams brought her husband to her assistance, who fought desperately ing usages of society. How are these drinking with the flames, but before he could smother them she was burned to a crisp. Regularly as the week comes, comes also the REGISTER, bringing to me in what you Eastern people would call my far away Western home, all the little items of interest transpiring in your city. I receive each week not less than twenty different ewspapers, but in all of these there is uone so ladly welcomed as the one that registers passing events in the quiet, pleasant city of Allentown. am not sure whether the excellence of your paper or the excellence of the people whose doings it chronicles is most the reason of its having found warm a place in my affections. I am not sure out that the many strong attachments formed durng my year's residence in Allentown and a desire to hear from these valued friends, has as much to lo with the pleasure I feel in receiving the REGIS TER as anything else. But then the value of a local paper is chiefly in its local department and If you did not collect, elaborate and publish in an
