CLEAR THE TRACK!
When I was in the south of France I made the acquaintance of a dear, old, fat, comfortable English lady—fat, comfortable, and good, inside and out—wearing capital tea and gold, and a pair of spectacles. One of these was about the size of a half-dollar, and she wore it on her nose. The whole place was in mourning. They set out in the day they came out; they lost their voices and galled their throats. Suffragettes of sulphur, metallic trowsers, hollow's pills, and other medical cures founded upon pure bosh, were brought out of the cupboard, and administered by the lady in question, and her husband, who, instead of telling the truth, preferred to utter the most unpalatable lies, and to stand on their hind legs and beg for a biscuit, or in coarsing parrots to talk.
