ANOTHER COURT.

There will be an effort at the next session o the Legislature to pass a bill creating a Court of Appeals, having concurrent jurisdiction with the Supreme Court. It is claimed that something must be done There's somebody comin' bown the stairs with to relieve the Judges of the Supreme Court, who are greatly overworked, so much so that nportant business has to remain undone to the injury of parties concerned that an additional Court, with concurrent jurisdiction, or an increase in the number of Judges of the Supreme Court, is necessary, must appear from the fact that forty years ago the number of ting position on a coal heap. He cursed in an Judges was increased from three to five, and We have no doubt that one of the first sensible acts of the Legislature will be either to Court or to create an additional Court.

It is to be admitted that there is a certain want of congruity between sawing wood and writing poetry ; but il even an inspired bard cannot support his family with his verses, it is his duty to exercise his fine poetic structure in prosaic employments, and to, save his frenzy for his leisure moments. Indeed, there is reason to believe that the poet who saws his wood first and courts the muse afterward will be more favored by that heavenly lady than the man who finds everything nathetic but the strugought to supply.

The London Times judges from its American exchanges and the tone of their special correspondence from America that President Grant will be renominated and elected, and expresses the sentiments of England as follows:

" In favor of this course will be the respect he has won from men of all parties by his honest and conscientions discharge of duty, and the knowledge of the electors that they have in him a tired man, fit for any emergency of the time. On the other side, there is only the prejudice of electing the same man twice-This feeling has been very strong with the present generation of Americans, and has, we believe, made a single term for the Presidency almost a cardinal principle with some politielans. It was not so in the early days of the Union. It remains to be seen whether General Grant's merits and popularity will secure him this high honor. We can only say that such a result of the coming discussions would be reseived with the utmost satisfaction in this country. The interests of England and the United States are now so interwoven in Commercial, and therefore, also in political matters, that the character of the American Executive is of no small importance to us, and we believe the general opinion to be that the States have never had a Government more nance of American credit.
