ETIQUETTE.
BY DEWELL R. DAVIS.
Riply on life's changing ocean,
Flecked from sunset's glowing
Lagging as a ray of sunshine,
Gem of twilight tints dost die!
Star of evening, twinkling, beaming,
Mildly shedding radiant light;
Sunbeam on the early morning,
Fair and charming, glow, bright,
May life's wintry blasts but kindly
Kiss thy cheek so pure and fair,
May Heaven's choicest, richest blessing
Be thy portion evermore.

THE NEGRO PRIEST.

A TRUE STORY.
While Dr. England, Bishop of Charleston, was on a visit to his native city, he became acquainted with an exceedingly intelligent negro, an Irishman by birth. After a few interviews with the young man, he conceived the idea of educating him for the priesthood, believing that he would be serviceable in that capacity among the negroes in South Carolina, many of whom were Catholics. Consequently he sent him to France to prepare for holy orders. After spending several years in the seminaries, having completed his studies, the young man came to his studies, and the Bishop obtained his gait facilities, and sent him on the mission among his brethren, but strange to say, they received him very coldly, and gave him to understand that they did not want him, that they preferred white shepherds. This greatly discouraged him, but he labored earnestly for a time, till finding he could do no good, he resolved to leave them and go to Europe, where he could be better received. Accordingly he started for New York to take passage for France. Arriving early on a Sunday morning he concluded to say mass as usual. St. Peter's being the nearest church, he directed his steps thither. Dr. P.—a, who was the pastor, was a native of Cork, like our friend, having come to the pastoral residence, our friend appended the steps, rang the bell, and entered the church with the usual solemnity. The servant informed him that the pastor was at breakfast, and pointing to the basement, "if you wish to see the doctor go down there."

The Alabama claims are to be adjudged by a commission, which is to sit in Washington. This is regarded as a commission to the Senate and House of Representatives to meet in joint convention, and the President of the Senate opens all the certificates, counts and proclaims the vote in the respective States, and who is chosen President and Vice President of the United States.
The person chosen President must have a majority of all the electoral votes, cast by special messenger, be transmitted from the person having the highest number, not exceeding three, in the list of those voted for President, the House of Representatives will proceed at once to choose by ballot a President; but if the House should not succeed in making a choice before the fourth of March, ending then, the Vice President will act as President as in the case of the death of the President.
The election has not devolved upon the House of Representatives since the election of John Quincy Adams, in 1825. The candidates voted for were Andrew Jackson, and John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, and William H. Crawford, and the number of electoral votes received by each stood in the order here named. Neither having a majority of the whole number, the election devolved upon the House of Representatives, and John Adams received a majority of the votes and was declared to be chosen the President, and was inaugurated on the fourth of March ensuing.
The result of the election was a ferment not only among leading politicians but through the country. It was thought as Gen. Jackson had more electoral votes than any of the rest he ought to be chosen. Of course, it was unreasonable, standing by itself; but it was connected with the election of Mr. Clay, who through his influence in favor of Mr. Adams, secured his election and was appointed Secretary of State, did so from corrupt motives, and the cry of "Bargain and Sale," headed many an article in the newspapers advocating General Jackson from one end of the Union to the other. This denunciation continued throughout the whole of President Adams's administration, and even after he had expired and Gen. Jackson had been installed as President. There was not the slightest foundation for this charge. There was no chance of Mr. Clay's own election, through his influence the State of Kentucky voted for Mr. Adams, which gave him a majority of the States. And as to the appointment of Mr. Clay to be Secretary of State, the leading point in the case of the aid the President-elect received from him and his friends; and second, on account of his transcendent abilities. There is not a politician of that day now surviving who believes that there was any undue standing—much less that there was any bribery between the two candidates, Messrs. Adams and Clay. The idea, in fact, is preposterous; for notwithstanding all the developments made by James Buchanan and Philip S. Markley, the latter a member of Congress from the adjoining county of Montgomery, and others at that time touching this question, no trace of evidence was produced.—Germanian Telegraph.
