"To please the taste and cheer the mind."
THE DISAPPOINTED ANGLERS.
AN INDIAN TALE.
In a winding of the river Armidar, just before it falls into the Caspian Sea, lies an island unfrequented by the inhabitants of the Continent. In this seclusion, blessed with all that wild uncultivated nature could bestow, lived a prince and her two daughters. She had been wrecked upon the coast while her children as yet were infants, who consequently, though grown up, were entirely unacquainted with man. Yet, inexperienced as the young ladies were in the opposite sex, both early discovered symptoms. the one of prudery, the other of being a coquette.—The elder was ever learning maxims of wisdom and discretion from her mother, while the younger employed all her hours in gazing at her own face in a neighbouring fountain. Their usual amusement in this solitude was fishing, their mother had taught them all the secrets of the art; she shewed them which was the most likely place to throw out the line, what baits where most proper for the various seasons, and the best manner to draw up the finney pry, when they had hooked it. In this manner they spent their time, easy and innocent; till one day the Princes being indisposed, desired them to go and catch her a sturgeon or a porpoise for supper, which she fancied might sit easy on her stomach. The daughters obeyed; and clapping on a gold fish, the usual bait on those occasions, went and sat upon one of the rocks, letting the gilded hook glide down the stream. On the opposite shore, father down, at the mouth of the river, lived a diver for pearls; a youth who, by long habit in his trade, was almost amphibious; so that he could remain long at the bottom of the water without ever fetching breath. He happened to be at the very instant diving when the ladies where fishing with the gilded hook. Seeing, therefore, the bait, which to him had the appearance of real gold, he was resolved to seize the prize; but both his hands being already filled with oysters, he found himself obliged to snap at it with his month. The consequence is easily imagined; the hook being unperceived was instantly fastened in his jaw, nor could he, with all his efforts at floundering, get free. 'Sister,' cries the youngest prince—'I have certainly caught a monstrous fish; I never perceived anything struggle so at the other end of my line before; come and help me draw it in.' They both now, therefore assisted in pulling up the diver on shore. but nothing could equal their surprise upon seeing him!
'Bless my eyes!' cried the prude—'what have we got here? This is a very odd fish to be sure! I never saw anything in my life look so queer. What eyes; what terrible claws; what a monstrous snout; it certainly must be a FANLANG, that eats women; let us throw it back again into the sea, where we found it.'
The diver in the mean time stood upon the bank, at the end of the line, with the hook in his mouth, using every art that he thought could excite pity, and particularly looking tender, usual in such circumstances. The coquette, therefore, in some measure influenced by the innocence of his looks, ventured to contradict her companion. 'Upon my word, sister,' says she, 'I see nothing in the animal so very terrible as you are pleased to apprehend; I think it may serve very well for a change. Always porpoises and sturgeons, and lobsters, and crawfish, make me quite sick. I fancy a slice of this nicely grilled, and dressed up with shrib sauce, would be very pretty eating. I fancy mamma would like a bit with pickle above all things in the world; and if it should not sit easy on her stomach, it will be time enough to discontinue it when found disagreeable, you know.'
'Horrid,' cries the prude, 'would the girl be poisoned! I tell you it is a FANLANG, I have read of it in twenty places, it is every where described as the most pernicious en-imal that ever infested the sea. I am certain that it is the most insidious, ravenous creatures in the world, and is sure destruction if taken internally.' The youngest sister was now therefore obliged to submit; both assisted in drawing the hook with some violence from the diver's jaw; and he finding himself at liberty, bent his breast against the broad wave and disappeared in an instant.

Just at this juncture the mother came down to the beach, to know the cause of her daughters' delay. They told her every circumstance describing the monster they had caught. The old lady was one of the most discreed women in the world. She was called the Blackeyed Princess, from two black eyes she received in her youth; being a little addicted to boxing in her liquor. 'Alas, my children,' cried she, 'what have you done? The fish caught was a man fish—one the most tame, domestic animals in the world. We could have let him run and play about the garden, and he would have been twenty times more interesting than our squirrel or monkey.' 'If that is all,' said the young coquette, 'we will fish for him again. If that be all, I'll hold three tooth picks to one pound of snuff I catch him whenever I please.' Accordingly they threw in their line once more; but with all their gilding, paddling and assiduity, they could never catch the diver. In this state of solicitude and disappointment they continued for some years, still fishing, but without success, till at last, the genius of the place, in pity to their distress, changed the prude into a shrimp, and the coquette into an oyster.

COLDS.
At this season of the year, when caught and colds are the order of the day, and scarce a family is not afflicted with them, the following remedy communicated by a Russian, as the usual mode, of getting rid of these complaints in that part of Russia from whence he came is simple. It is no other than a strong tea of elder flowers, sweetened with honey, either fresh or dried. A basin of this tea is to be drunk as hot as possible after the person is warm in bed; it produces a strong perspiration, and a slight cold or cough yields to it immediately; but the most stubborn will require two or three repetitions.

An Ohio paper thinks that the editor of the Lancaster Eagle, a fellow weighing three hundred avoirdupois, ought to be "tried by a court of justice."
He had better be "tried" by a tallow chandler.—Prentice.

Voltaire, speaking of the impossibility of fixing any standard of beauty, or defining it, says, if you ask a tode what is beautiful, he will tell you it is his wife, with a speckled back and yellow throat.

There is a man in Michigan, so long that it takes him three hours to get straight.
Wonder if he isn't the fellow who was forced to kneel down to unscrew the weather-cock on the Old South Church of Holston.
Yes, precisely the same—and when he came to straighten up again, his head came in contact with the moon, and knocked it into a cocked hat.

Going the Entire.—A fellow was recently met in great haste, going towards a pill manufactory in one of our northern cities.
'Hallo, Jim, which way now, so fast?'
'The fact is I have taken two boxes of fashionable pills, directions, boxes and all, without doing me any good. I'm going to swallow the agent new to see what effect he will have.'

STREET COLLOQUY.—'Hallo, Jake! wish you happy New Year.' 'Thank'; sir—wish ye April Fool.'
