DR. LEIDY'S BLOOD PILLS,

A COMPONENT PART OF WHICH SARSAPARILLA.

IT is attempted by Quacks and Impostors to introduce their vile and dangerous nostrums by assuming for their name that of "BLOOD PILLS" knowing that the Blood Pills manufactured by Dr. Leidy have obtained the greatest reputation of any Pills in existence, and thank by such trickery to impose upon the public by selling their trash upon the popularity of Dr. Leidy's Blood Pills.

The public are therefore particularly requested to be cautious when purchasing, to ask for DR. LEIDY'S BLOOD PILLS.

The public are assured that Dr. Leidy's Blood Pills are the safest, best, and most effectual of any now in use, containing neither Mercury or the Minerals, and may be employed by young and old, male and female at all times and under all circumstances without fear from taking cold, restraint from diet in living or occupation.

Further comment is deemed unnecessary the numerous certificates published from time to time from Physicians and other individuals must have convinced the incredulous, and for the further information of all others, Dr. Leidy refers them to the directions which accompany each Box.

IMPORTANT WORK NOW IN COURSE OF PUBLICATION

A DICTIONARY OF ARTS, MANUFACTURES AND MINES.

Containing a clear exposition of the Principles and Practice,

BY ANDREW URE, M. D., F. R. S. &c

ILLUSTRATED with 1241 ENGRAVINGS.

This is, unquestionably the most popular work of the kind ever published, and a book most admirably adapted to the wants of all classes of community. The following are the most important objects which the learned author endeavors to accomplish:

1st. To instruct the manufacturer, metallurgist, and tradesman, in the principles of their respective processes, so as to render them, in reality, the masters of their business, and to emancipate them from a state of bondage to such as are too commonly governed by blind prejudice and a vicious routine.

2dly. To afford Merchants, Brokers, Drysalters, Druggists, and Officers of the Revenue, characteristic descriptions of the commodities which pass through their hands.

3dly. By exhibiting some of the finest developments of Chemistry and Physics, to lay open an excellent practical school to students of these kindred sciences.

4thly. To teach Capitalists, who may be desirous of placing their funds in some productive branch of industry, to select, judiciously, among plausible claimants.

5thly. To enable gentlemen of the law to become well acquainted with the nature of those patent schemes which are so apt to give rise to litigation.

6thly. To present to Legislators, such a clear exposition of the staple manufactures, as may dissuade them from enacting laws which obstruct industry, or cherish one branch of it to the injury of many others.

And lastly, to give the general reader, intent chiefly on Intellectual Cultivation, views of many the noblest achievements of science, in affecting those grand transformations of matter to which Great Britain and the United States owe their paramount wealth, rank and power, among the nations of the earth.

The latest statistics of every important object of manufacture are given from the best, and, usually from official authorities, and from the 2d London Edition, which sells for $11 a copy. It will be put on good paper, in new brevity type, and will make about 1400 8vo. pages. It will be issued in twenty-one semi-monthly numbers, (in covers,) at 25 cents each, payable on delivery.

To any person sending us $5 at one time in advance, we will forward the numbers by mail, post paid, as soon as they come from the press.

To suitable Agents, this affords a rare opportunity as we can put the work to them on terms extraordinarily favorable. In every manufacturing town, and every village throughout the United States and Canada, subscribers may be obtained with the greatest facility. Address: post paid, D. Appleton & Co. 200 Broadway, New York.

To every editor who gives this advertisement entire 12 insertions, we will forward to him, one copy of the whole work, providing the papers containing this notice be sent to the New York Watchman New York.

From the Democratic Review.

THE YEOMAN'S REVENGE.

A bitter quarrel ensued. With a thousand words of the keenest sting and of the most scornful bitterness, the brother charged the lover with a treacherous abuse of the privileges of hospitality, of the opportunities afforded by patronising kindness which had its origin in an accidental occurrence of childhood; and of that confidence which was founded on the presumed impossibility of such a return. He accused him of taking an unmanly and ungrateful advantage of his position to ensure the too generous and romantic feelings of an enthusiastic girl, whose life he had happened to save, for the promotion of an overweening ambition even if for no baser motive. Rejecting the idea that so unworthy a sentiment could possibly have taken any deep root in his sister's heart, he repulsed with the most contemptuous insult the application which it was Edward's object to make, for his own consent, and aid to obtain that of his father. On the other hand, the latter met him with equal haughtiness and anger, scoffing contemptuously at his pretensions of aristocratic superiority; and losing sight of every prudent motion, as well as all command of his temper, he repaid insult with insult, and scorn with scorn. What would have been the result of so fiery a collision, notwithstanding all the restraints, on the one hand of a conscious debt of life, and on the other, of the fraternal relation of his antagonist to his mistress, cannot be known; for before it had proceeded to the length of a blow on either side, on the very verge of which the altercation seemed already to hover, the Baronet and Lady in the park where they stood, riding leisurely back from their sport. Observing the flushed and angry countenances of the young men & the violence of their manner, he hurried quickly up to them, and in great surprise inquired the meaning of what he saw. Almost beside himself with the exasperation both of the quarrel and its cause, George at once disclosed the whole in the bitterest language of retraction against the treachery and ingratitude and base presumption of the other. Its effect on Sir Wilmot presented so suddenly—in so dark an aspect—in a for a calculated most violently to shock all his deepest prejudices and to arouse all his angriest passions—was fearful. His face purpled with the blood that flooded to his head—it was a moment of insanity. "Serpent—Hound!" were the only words he could articulate—when, denied the vent of language, his passion, always impetuous, but never perhaps similarly enraged, sought that of instinctive action. Spurring his horse upon the youth who stood bareheaded, with his arms folded across his breast, and without a syllable of reply to either, the old Baronet in his madness, with the handle of a very heavy riding whip dealt him a sudden blow on the right temple, which staggered as he was in frame, stunned him instantly and felled him to the earth. When he recovered his consciousness, he found himself in the hands of servants who had been left with him, and who, by the commands of their master, had borne him for some distance across the park (which on this side was on the edge of the B—estate,) and placed outside of the lodge and wall, and of course beyond the limit of the domain from which, by this act, in addition to his other insults and wrongs, he was even forcibly ejected. Disengaging himself from their hands when they were in the act of wiping from his face the blood which had trickled down from a broad gash made on his forehead by Sir Wilmot's blow, he made his own way to his own home, his head whirling with a chaos of confused thoughts of vengeance, and all hell in his heart.—All this had taken place, too, in the presence, forgotten or disregarded, both of Lord Forester and of the two servants by whom they were attended.

A servant soon arrived from the Hall, bringing a variety of articles of sporting gear which belonged to him, and a prohibition against being ever again seen either at the Hall or within the B—domain. Poor Alice, sorely as she was stricken, behaved nobly and beautifully; developing a degree of independence and energy of character they were not prepared to find. When she was informed of what had occurred, she herself reproved even her father with a most eloquent severity for the great wrong he had done, to one whose only crime, besides that of saving the lives of both George and herself, had been that of loving her well, and of well deserving her love. She steadily refused to send him any message of rejection, though she made no disclosure of what course she might pursue and when hard pressed by her father, she claimed the right of being left to compose her own thoughts, so violently agitated and agonized by such events, within her own privacy; after which for three days, she neither made her appearance among the family nor admitted one but her own maid to her room, imploring her father's forbearance and permission to indulge for a few days her natural desire of being left alone and undisturbed.

She there formed her own resolve, thro' prayers and many tears, but bravely and worthily of her own right noble nature.—She felt how heavily her lover had been wronged. Her sense of justice revolted indignantly against it. She felt his right to an atonement commensurate with the outrage that had been heaped upon him—and that she alone could make, she alone heal the deep and envenomed lacerations that had been ploughed into his heart. Had the course of her father and brother been different, had it been less violent and less unjust, her own too might have been different; and then affections of nature and kin might have triumphed over that other love which however strong in her heart, was yet of later growth and less deep root.—But they had placed themselves so widely to the wrong, that they cast over into the opposite side of the balance every consideration of justice and right, as approved by her conscience, to be added to every impulse of generosity and womanly tenderness, as prompted by her heart, and she resolved to abandon home rank, father and kin, to be the wife of her lowly, yet, as she deemed him; noble and worthy peasant lover; and as such to devote her life to the compensation of all he had to endure on her account and from her own blood. It was a hard trial both of her heart and conscience; yet, convincing herself, by a generous elevation of reasoning, that in the choice between a duty sacred in remaining faithful to the plighted troth she had given in exchange for another heart; she wrote him the following note, which she had no difficulty in conveying to him through the agency of her devoted maid, to whom she did not hesitate to impart a full confidence of the determination she had arrived at:

"If the house of B—, in their pride, have scorned and spurned their very preserver, her gratitude, her love, and her faith are not forgotten by their daughter.

ALICE.

When she re-appeared in the midst of her family, though sad and abstracted, Alice was yet calm. Her first words to her father were a simple request that no allusion should be made to the recent occurrence, or to any concerned in it. Deeply grieved at both he and her brother were for her, in the midst of all the stern bitterness of their resentment against Edward, whose conduct their deep rooted prejudices of family pride permitted them to see only in the worst of lights, they willingly complied with this request; which, moreover, they construed into an acquiescence with their own severance of all communication with the low born peasant, as they regarded him, who had been the cause of this thunderbolt which has thus fallen in their midst.

If Alice now, for the first time in her life, departed from the transparent candor and truthfulness which had always hitherto so beautifully marked all her intercourse with them, if it was a fault—or, rather, though it was a fault, it was surely not the unpardonable sin. In reply to her note she received the most devoted protestations of gratitude, and an intreaty for an interview, which, however, must not be within the limits of any portion of the B—domain. The spot he named was that at which he had been cast forth beyond the wall of the park—the hour being left to her to fix.—There was an indiscreet something in his letter which grated rather harshly on the intensely strung feelings of Alice; but she complied with his request, and promised to be at the spot indicated that same night, at the only time at which she could escape the many eyes to which she was exposed, after the household of the Hall should have retired to rest. Attended by her maid, supported by her own nobleness of spirit, and fearless in her innocence and loving trust, she kept the promise; and gliding noiselessly forth, stole like the ray of moonlight through the deep shadows of the stately avenues of the park, till she stood at the spot appointed, and was folded in that tender clasp of her lover, now as it seemed to her a hundred fold dearer than he had ever been before.

The Muse that invented history never meant it for such interviews. I confine my narrative to its results. In about a month George was to become of age, and a great family festival was to commemorate the event; after which, on the ensuing day, it had been planned that they were to leave the Hall, for a visit to town and a continu-
