M. LAFITTE,

The great Parisian banker, who recently died possessed of immense wealth, rose to fortune from an humble station in life, A foreign journal by a late arrival contains the following story of his first appearance in Paris:

When M. Lafitte came to Paris in 1778 the extent of his ambition was to find situation in a Sanking house, and to attain this object he called on M. Perregnux, the just taken possession of the hotel of Madie. Gurmard, which had been put up to lottery by that lady and won by the fortunate banker. It was to this charming habitation. which has since been demolished, that M. Lafitte paid his first visit in Paris, and, as it were, took his first step in his Parisian world. The young provincial-poor and modest, timid and anxious-entered by that gate-way which had witnessed so many of introduced into the boudair of the dansense.

'It is impossible for me to admit you in to my establishment at least for the present.' their full complement. If I require any one at a future time, I will see what can be done; but in the meantime I advise you to seek elsewhere, for I do not expect to have a vacancy for some time."

With a disappointed heart the young as pirant for employed left the office, and while with a downcast look he traversed the courteyard he stopped to pin which lay in his path, and which he carefully struck in the lappel of his coat. Little did he think that this trivial action was to decide his future fate, but so it was.

From the window of his cabinet M Ferregaux had observed the action of the young man. The Swiss banker was one of those keen observers of human action who estimate the value of circumstances apparently trifling in themselves, and which would pass unnoticed by the majority of mankind. He was delighted with the conduct of the young stranger In this simple action he saw the revelation of a character. it a was guarantee of a love of order and economy; a certain pledge of all the qualities which he should be possessed by good financier. A young man who would pick up a pin could not fail to make a good clerk, merit the confidence of his employer, and attain a high degree of prosperity.

In the evening of the same day M. La fitte received the following note from M. Pertegaux:

'A place is made for you in my office. which you may take possession of to-morrow morning.'

The anticipations of the banker were not deceived. The young Lafittee possessed every desirable quality, and even more than was at first expected. From simple clerk he soon rose to eashier; than partner. then head of the first banking house in Par is, and afterward, in rapid succession, a deputy and president of the Council of William Hartman and Charles White, and citizen can aspire.

On what a trifle does the fortune of a man sometimes depend. But for this simple incident of the pin, M. Lafitte would, per haps, never have entered into the house of of a man, generous to prodigality in doing to the place of beginning, containing good-a hand always open to succor honorable misfortune.

Never were riches placed in better hands -never did banker or prince make a more noble use of them.

A adjutant of a volunteer corps being doubtful whether he had distributed muskets to all the men, cried, 'All of you that are without arms, hold up your hands!"

Every vegetable,' said a wag the other day, 'in its proper season-cowslips in spring, eucumbers to summer, cantelopes in sutumn, and whiskers in winter."

A man in the West recently quarrelled with his wife. He seized an axe, and before the poor woman could get out of the way-he rushed madly into the yard, andsplit some wood!

Insure yours Houses,-The Baltimore Argus quantly observes, although honesty is the best policy, it will not be available in time of fire.
