ABERNETHY & THE BREWERSCLERK

About a year and a half before the deat of Abernethy. a big fellow, clerk in a brew ers establishment, went to consult that eminent man, when the following conversation took place between them:-

The patient, who had a very crazy frame but a sound understanding, said, upon entering the parlor, and seeing a little old looking man, with the knees of his breeches loose.

'I want to speak to Dr. Abernethy.' Doctor! I am no doctor. What brings you here?'

"I came for advice, to be sure. You don't think I came to ask you how you do?'

'Hahl' muttered Mr. Abernethy, evident ly pleased with meeting a congenial cus tomer. 'No, I hope not, But there is no use in your coming to me for advice. You won't take it.'

'Yes, I will.'

'l'll be d-d if you do.'

I'll be d-d if I don't'

.What trade are you! A butcher, or costermonger!"

'Not a bit of it. You're are all wrong I'm a trewer's clerk.'

'What they call a broad cooper?' 'No. I am a collecting clerk.'

"Worse and worse! Nothing can satisfy fellows of your kind. You drink beer till you burst. Show me your tongue."

The patient immediately obeyed the command by folling a large, yellow, furry longue over his chin.

'Bad,' said Mr. Abernethy, 'very bad You were drunk last night?' 'No, I wasn't.'

"So much the worse, for the state of your himself to be an object of interest to her. tongue must then proceed from habitual I returned her glances with interest, and drinking. You are always drunk, sud you threw all the tenderness into my eyes don't know it. You drink what your fellows call heavy wet?'

'No, I don't: I drink ale, because I wish to serve my employers."

"To serve your employers?' Then you pay for what you drink?'

No, I don't, I happen to be in one of the first houses in London.'

"Then if you stay much longer with them they will be one of the last. 'Yes, I will,'

'No, you won't; you have no memory.' .Yes, I have as good a memory as you; I'll get off a hundred lines of Milton's 'Far-dise Lost' with you any day.' 'Ay, Pandemonium! You are always dreaming of the devil and all his angels. Is'nt that it?'

'No it isn't; but I often feel a palpitation of the heart and headache, without having thought she evinced some emction at re teen a bit lumpy.'
