Gen Santa Anna was received with every demonstration of respect on his arrival a Havana, being escorted to his lodgings by bands of music, while little attention was paid to Gen. Bustamente, thus shewing that popular opinion was quite unfavorable to the newly constituted authorities of Mexico.

We have no positive particulars as to the course pursued by the Mexican govern ment, in banishing Santa Anna, but Capt Parkinson informs us that he understood that years-that his private property was respeciel-that he had with him a large a mount of money and was in good personal health and apirits.
