

philosophic greatness awaited his approaching dissolution. His close of life was attended by the tears and thanks of those whom his services had richly blessed. His 'farewell' to a prosperous and powerful people was sweetened by the prospect of a blissful immortality. He was lamented by those who loved him truly, zealously and tenderly. His obsequies were performed by the freemen of his country, who sorrowed over him in the overflowing tributes of their hearts, as a chief of their faith, and as a friend and benefactor to them all. And his memory will be forever consecrated in the hearts of his countrymen, and the very spot of his repose be hallowed by their pilgrimages. And now, if amid the solemnities that pervade the nation, and while the volleys can yet almost be heard echoing over his lowly pillow, if the sanctuary of the sepulchre cannot shield him, and any one can remember that Calvary has ever dared call him ambitious, to him I answer, that, save the father of his country, whose spirit might have loved to be the guardian angel of our hero, no man has ever possessed the power of this one and used it so leniently, or offered it up so disinterestedly on the altar of his country's good as the hero of the Hermitage.

Fellow citizens:—'Tis the character of men like this one that sheds light around our inquiry when we ask ourselves the destiny of our nature, and how we may elevate it. 'Tis the memory of true greatness like this man's, that ennobles our sentiments and dignifies our actions. And 'tis the emulation and ardour which the world's just tributes to such a man inspire, that gives that energy and zeal to our actions, that only can make them effectual for good to man and our country, or productive of honor to ourselves. As such let us venerate the hero—as such admire his unfaded fame—and as such strive to embody his unstained virtues. For as such men are not born for any one country, so are they not for any time. The world is their home and immortality their life time.

I have trespassed thus far on the festivities of the day and your kind indulgence, and, if I have spoken too strongly of his worth, I should certainly crave your pardon, did I not know that no one can feel here without feeling strongly, none speak sincerely without speaking warmly, and none endeavor to pay an honest tribute to his memory without feeling the weakness of language to portray his sentiments or do justice to his subject. For while we are gathered to mourn his loss to-day, we are but consoled by the prosperity of that country whose brightest page of history is adorned and identified with his name, and our grief is assuaged only by recurring to his departed worth as it was among us, and in admiration of his patriotic achievements.

Yes! amid the rejoicing on this our national birth-day, there appears to be grief associated with everything. If we hear the shout of the people, we hear too echoing in our fancy their universal shout that arose on the achievement of victories such as that of New Orleans, and we remember that their chieftain is fallen. If we look over the freemen of this country, we must think that he who led their van in the cause of Liberty is no more. If we behold to days pageantry and pomp, it reminds us of a hero once triumphing in the honors of his country, and we look for him in vain. We hear our prosperity recounted, and when we ask ourselves who participated most gloriously in its achievement, turn with grief to the record of a great man's death. We listen to our history, and its pages but blazon forth his name and his virtues for renewed sorrow.

And now, that con-emptible censure and invidious abuse are hushed, and since the tongue of slander is palsied as his dust, the polestar of his honor shall shine more resplendent, and a brighter halo encircle the name of JACKSON in the firmament of our national glory. And may the mantle of his virtues have fallen on us, and in ever nobly striving for our country's welfare, may we never shame the heritage of that country's sire and friend.

BLOOMSBURG R. R. I. C.

We publish below for the information of our citizens, the late act of Assembly authorizing this company to construct a Railroad from the canal to their works.—Pamphlet Laws 1845, page 438.

SECTION 1. That the Bloomsburg railroad and iron company, in the county of Columbia, in the state of Pennsylvania, shall have the right to construct a single or double track railroad, from their basin on the North Branch canal, near the town of Bloomsburg to their iron works on Fishing creek, a distance of about one mile; said road to be for the accommodation of said company, in transporting their coal, limestone, iron, merchandize, and other personal property.

SECTION 2. The said road shall not pass within fifty feet of any building on said line of road, without the consent of the owner or owners thereof; and in case of disagreement between the property holders on said line of road, and said company, as to the value of the ground to be occupied by said road, then and in that case, the judges of the court of quarter sessions of the county of Columbia shall appoint three disinterested and judicious persons, whose duty it shall be to view and examine the line of said road, and award such damages, (if there should be any,) as they, on their oaths or affirmations, shall deem just and proper, and said railroad company shall pay each of said juries the sum of two dollars per day, for each day necessarily spent in discharging said duties; and shall, if desired by the property holders on said line of road, give good and sufficient security, in double the amount awarded, conditioned for the payment of the award of said jury, and the award of said jury may be entered in the court of common pleas of said county, and on confirmation thereof by said court, the same shall have the effect of a judgment against the property of said company, to be collected as other judgments are by law collected.

SECTION 3. That either party shall have the right of appeal from the confirmation of said award to the court of common pleas of said county, on complying with the provisions of existing laws relating to appeals to the court of common pleas, from the award of arbitrators.

SPECIAL ACT.

We insert in our paper of to-day, an act of the last Legislature authorizing the Canal Commissioners to examine the claim of Elizabeth Millard for damages by reason of the construction of the North Branch Canal through her property &c. We suppose the lady intended, resides above the Halfway house. We know nothing about the matter; it may be right or it may be wrong; but we suppose Ex Senator Heady can explain it as he is a relation of the lady and was at Harrisburg about the time of its passage last winter. The act is to be found on page 210, Pamphlet Laws, 1845.

Section 1. That the canal commissioners be, and they are hereby authorized and directed to examine, by the inspection of at least one of their number, the claim of Elizabeth Millard, for alleged damage done to her farm by the construction of the North Branch Division of the Pennsylvania canal, and adjust the same upon principles of equity and justice, taking into consideration, in their estimate of damage, all the advantage resulting to the said property from the location and construction of the said canal, and report their proceedings and decision to the next legislature.
